Dead, 53 Missing in Idaho Flood; Devastation Is Vast

By GRACE LICHTENSTEIN
Special to The New York Times

IDAHO FALLS, June 6—Sixty-two people were reported dead and 30,000 were left homeless after a flood that swept through the Upper Snake River Valley after a concrete dam burst yesterday. The Idaho Falls Hospital said that about 80 people had been treated for minor injuries and that one person had been treated for serious injuries. President Ford declared the region a disaster area, making residents eligible for low-cost loans to restore property and businesses. The torrent of mud, trees, debris and water poured into the Snake River above Idaho Falls, the state's third-largest city. It overflowed into low-lying commercial areas within the city and forced the closing of most of the town's bridges. Sandbag dikes were hastily thrown up along the river bank. Natural gas was shut off to the entire west bank of the city while hundreds of persons were evacuated.

A resident of Rexburg, Idaho, carries a stereo set from her flooded house.

Many Maneuvers Cloud Plan to Reopen City U.

By IVER PETERSON
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, June 6—Democratic leaders in the state Legislature plan a push for passage of a City University rescue package this week, based on a theory of breaking the State Senate's seven Republican seats from New York City away from their leader's opposition to the Democratic plan. Republican strategists for the weekend were lined up to oppose the plan. Their leader, Warren M. Anderson of Binghamton, the state's majority leader, would be supported by Assembly Democrats from upstate areas who are id to be fearful of handing the city a rescue package to City University campuses in both town areas face stringent budgetary cutbacks. The upshot, as legislators are aware for what could be the 10th push for City University of station starting tomorrow, is that the chances of the university's reopening appeared uncertain today as they did when it was closed for lack of funds last Tuesday.

Beirut and Phalangist Radicals Report Shelling on Leftist and Palestinian Fronts

Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Monday, June 7—Air strikes and shelling attacks were reported last night on Palestinian and Lebanese leftist positions in eastern Lebanon, where Syrian troops later entered the country in strength. Beirut Radio, which is controlled by leftists, and the right-wing Phalangist radio reported the attacks, though it was unclear who was piloting the planes that reportedly struck positions at Mureijat on the main Damascus-Beirut highway and farther north in the contested Metn Valley area. Yasir Arafat, the head of the Palestine Liberation Organization, was reported to have sent an urgent message to Arab heads of state charging that Syria had launched an all-out offensive in Lebanon. After moving into the Bekaa Valley last week, Syrian troops

Air Academy Unit Had a Market Loss Of Up to $549,803

Special to The New York Times

COLORADO SPRINGS—The athletic association that runs varsity sports for the Air Force Academy lost thousands of dollars on investments in stocks and bonds from 1970 through 1974. The academy acknowledged the loss in response to a report yesterday by Representative Les Aspin, a member of the House Armed Services Committee. However, Mr. Aspin and the school differed on the amounts involved. Mr. Aspin, a Wisconsin Democrat, made public audits indicating that the Air Force Academy Athletic Association lost $549,803 when it sold various securities for less than their purchase price. Meanwhile, its portfolio earned $445,648 in income and dividends in the five years. Thus it

Defends Right to Send Pupils to Segregated Ones if No Federal Aid is Given

Special to The New York Times

CLEVELAND, June 6—President Ford said today that parents should have the right to send their children to segregated private academies so long as the schools did not obtain Federal funds or tax advantages. The President, amplifying his opposition to court-ordered busing as a device to desegregate public schools, defended segregated private academies in a television interview made public as he campaigned in New Jersey and Ohio. The interview was aired nationally a few hours before Mr. Ford arrived in Cleveland to hail the National Conference of Christians and Jews, at the organization's regional banquet, for what he called its efforts "to promote harmony and brotherhood."

Mr. Ford told questioners on the CBS News program "Face the Nation" that he would not support a ban on such schools.

Carter Victory Is Forecast In Jersey Vote Tomorrow

Some Party Leaders Predict Georgian Will Win a Majority of State's 91 Delegates—Brown Impact Unclear

By RONALD SULLIVAN
Special to The New York Times

TRENTON, June 6—Knowledgeable Democratic Party leaders in New Jersey seemed fairly sure today that former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia would win the victory that had been widely predicted for him in Tuesday's Democratic Presidential primary in the state. Most of the leaders' assessments appear to be tentative and laced with imponderables. They estimated that Mr. Carter would win a majority of the 91 delegates that are to be elected. However, there was wide disagreement over the extent of his prospective majority. Moreover, State Senator James P. Dugan, the Democratic state chairman and leader of the party's forces backing the uncommitted delegate candidates, predicted that they would elect a majority.

The vote in New Jersey is one of three major primaries on Tuesday, the last of the 30 in the series that started Feb. 24 in New Hampshire. Tuesday's other contests are in California and Ohio. In New Jersey, the uncommitted delegates have endorsed both Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota and Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California, thus giving the regular party organization the unusual choice of having two candidates for just one vote. Governor Brown's late candidacy and the defeats he inflicted upon Mr. Carter in Maryland and Rhode Island have caused many of the same Democrats who were predicting a Carter victory this weekend to question whether a final two days of campaigning here by Governor Brown would force a standoff and produce a virtual tie for the stop-Carter forces here and across the nation.

The third major contender is Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona. In the Republican primary, President Ford is the overwhelming favorite to win virtually all of the 67 delegates, although they appear on the ballot uncommitted. Former Gov. Ronald Reagan of California has not campaigned here, nor has he authorized inclusion of his name on the ballot. Even so, conservative Republicans have organized a delegate campaign in his behalf, both statewide and in selected Congressional districts, committed on the ballot to someone called "Former California Governor."

Leading Democrats Decry New York Party 'Disunity'

By FRANK LYNN

Five weeks before the Democratic National Convention, the New York State Democratic Party, the host for the convention, is in probably greater disarray than it has been in many years despite the fact that the party has a Democratic Governor and a Democratic Mayor of New York City who would normally unify and guide it.

Quite the contrary, party leaders concede. At the moment no one is unifying or guiding. In fact, they say, the party is leaderless. "There has never been such a display of disunity—everyone is a leader," said Frank G. Rossetti, the Manhattan Democratic leader, who presides over one of the more chaotic county organizations in the state. Mr. Rossetti's view was echoed by other Democratic leaders who had expected that with a Democratic Governor for the first time in 16 years—state patronage and contracts order out of the chaos in the party. But the chaos continues, top Democrats agree. The Governor, now preoccupied with fiscal crises, but who even disdained Democratic organization politics when he was a member of the House of Representatives from Brooklyn, failed in his initial plan to put together an uncommitted delegation to the national convention with which he could bargain. Instead, the delegation is split among supporters of Jimmy Carter, Representative Morris K. Udall, Senator Henry M. Jackson, who is no longer an active candidate; Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, who is still trying to decide whether to be one, and uncommitted delegates.

At one end of the state, a powerful Democrat, Mayor Beame, is working for Jimmy

Wallace at the End of a Long Trail

By B. DRUMMOND AYRES Jr.
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, June 6—Politically spent and thoroughly dispirited after a dozen unsuccessful years of campaigning for the Presidency, Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama made one final, feeble foray onto the hustings this weekend. The American voter, he said, will not again see him in the role of Presidential candidate. There remains, of course, the July trip to the Democratic nominating convention in New York City, where Mr. Wallace will try to deal a bit with the 170 or so delegates he has accumulated thus far. But for all practical purposes, the George Wallace that most Americans have come to know—the pugnacious standard-bearer of the fed-up—will be gone after a final plea or two tomorrow for support in Tuesday's California primary.

The Governor seemed almost relieved at the prospect that the long journey that began in 1964 was almost over. Much of his conversation in California has been about "my duties" back in Alabama. A good part of his time here has been spent before television sets in his hotel room, hardly the accustomed style of one of the most compulsive campaigners of American politics.

Mr. Wallace arrived in California late Thursday night just in time to learn that the latest poll by the respected Field Research Corporation was projecting that he would get only 2 percent of the vote. That was down from 5 percent projected in early May and 9 percent projected in late March. Nevertheless, the Governor bravely asserted to the half-dozen or so supporters who greeted him at Los Angeles International Airport that he was still a "viable" candidate. His aides lifted him gently from his wheelchair into a car and he drove off into the darkness, his head buried in his hands. In earlier campaigns, Mr. Wallace was typically greeted at airports by cheering throngs. He usually responded with a fiery speech that castigated

Ted Gross in 1972

By PETER KRASS

Ted Gross, who rose from helping keep peace on the city streets to become Youth Services Commissioner and who then plunged spectacularly, serving a 16-month prison term for taking contract kickbacks, was found murdered yesterday morning—execution style. The police, summoned to "investigate an accident," found the 44-year-old former official slumped in the driver's seat of a four-door Citroën sedan with two or more gunshot wounds. The bullets apparently were fired into the back of his head from a handgun wielded from the back seat. There were three similar wounds in the back of the head of a 24-year-old passenger in the car, Melita Sneed. The car had stopped against a divider on Flatbush Avenue Extension, just south of Myrtle Avenue, in Brooklyn, about 7:15 A.M. Miss Sneed, who lived alone at 1521 Sheridan Avenue, the Bronx, was taken to Cumberland Hospital where she was reported in critical condition and under police guard. Mr. Gross was pronounced dead on arrival at the hospital. Detective Capt. Harold Coleman said it was believed that there had been two men in the rear seat of the black sedan before the killing. The car's license plate, 638 BQZ, was registered to the RCG Cab Corporation, with an address at 309 West 103d Street, a four-story brownstone owned by Mr. Gross. Robbery appeared to be ruled

STUDY FINDS CIA FAILED TO FULFILL SOME KEY TASKS

Report to Senate Unit Says Analytic Work Suffered as Covert Acts Grew

By DAVID BINDER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 6—An authoritative history of the Central Intelligence Agency released today holds that the agency has failed over the last three decades to fulfill several of its essential missions. The study, prepared with the cooperation of the agency for the Senate Select Committee to Study Governmental Operations With Respect to Intelligence Activities, further concludes that the agency, over the years, became a bureaucracy that was smothered because of conflicting interests. It says that the agency, despite its successes, especially in scientific and technical fields, was "distorted" very early by both its directors and their superiors, and moved away from its prime task of providing high quality intelligence analysis for the American political leadership.

Others Share Blame

For example, the history notes that the agency had no estimates of Communist intentions in Korea before the North Korean attack on South Korea in 1950. It also notes that economic intelligence and international narcotics traffic intelligence were given priority only in the last decade and that attention to underdeveloped countries did not begin until the 1960's. The history, which has been thoroughly read and declassified line by line by agency officials, also says the agency failed to become a truly "central" intelligence service coordinating all espionage resources of the United States. The study blames a succession of Presidents, Congress, the armed services and the agency itself for the shortcomings. But its principal conclusion is that the C.I.A., because of its peculiar nature, was destined to develop controversial qualities.

Chinese Papers Take Differing Roads In Drive Against 'Capitalist Roaders'

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
HONG KONG, June 6 — Analysts searching for clues to the direction of the current antirightist campaign in China are being confronted with a quandary. The official Chinese press seems to be speaking with several different voices at once.

Students at Tsinghua University in Peking read wall posters that are critical of Teng Hsiao-ping.

In signed articles in Peking's major newspapers, there are repeated calls for attacks on unnamed "high officials" who are said to be "capitalist roaders within the party" like the disgraced former deputy prime minister, Teng Hsiao-ping.

One particularly strident article signed "Liang Hsiao" — believed to be the pseudonym for a prolific group of leftist writers — warned that these rightist party leaders must be rooted out, for they are "imbued with an extremely counterrevolutionary kind of treachery" and like "all Confucianists" are hankering after killing without even a blink of the eyes.

Support from Mao Chairman Mao Tse-tung himself is said to have supported this criticism with a new oracular quotation now being cited in the rash of new articles. "A number of party members," the Chairman is reported to have said, "have moved backward and opposed the revolution. Why? Because they have become high officials and want to protect the interests of the high officials."

Yet at the same time, analysts here have noted that editorials in Jenmin Jih Pao, the official Communist Party daily, have clung to a milder stance. The most recent editorial last Sunday made no mention of these "high officials," and dealt with the seemingly more innocuous theme that "the masses are the real heroes."

Little is known about the inner workings of the Chinese press. But one possible explanation for this divergence of view between the signed articles and the editorials is that the managements of the papers deliberately permit a variety of opinion in their news columns during campaigns on the principle that some of these articles will make a genuine contribution to the debate.

On the other hand, the editorials, being more authoritative, must first be agreed on by the entire editorial board and undoubtedly are also passed on by whatever group of senior leaders is making policy in Peking today.

Broadening of Targets In the view of some analysts, China's so-called "radicals" were not satisfied with the ouster of the unfortunate Mr. Teng in April and have been trying through the news attacks in the press to broaden the targets of the campaign. But, the analysts also believe, the radicals appear to have been stalemated, temporarily at least, by their political opponents—the so-called moderates—who still occupy sufficiently powerful positions to keep their attacks from becoming official policy.

It looks like they just don't have the horses," one Western analyst here observed. "The campaign appears to be killing."

To oversimplify, the "radicals" are ideologues who side with Chairman Mao in putting revolutionary rectitude ahead of mere economic development. The "moderates" are generally longtime party administrators, practical politicians, who stress centralized authority and orderly economic growth. This handy but probably misleading practice of categorizing Chinese leaders follows Chairman Mao's own habit of constantly speaking of the "struggle between the two lines."

There are some indications that the Chinese themselves are far from reaching a verdict on the outcome of the campaign. One Chinese Communist representative in Hong Kong, when asked recently whether more party officials would be purged, replied simply, "It all depends."

There are also indications that many Chinese, as well as analysts in Hong Kong, are having trouble following the latest twists in the official line, especially Chairman Mao's favorite notion that "the bourgeoisie is right inside the party."

"As first, I could not understand this," writes Liu Chun-chiao, the first secretary of a country party committee in Hunan, Chairman Mao's native province.

"Before, when I talked about grasping class struggle, I meant struggle against the landlords, rich peasants, counterrevolutionaries, bad elements and rightists," related Mr. Liu in an article broadcast last week over the provincial radio station. "I could not see clearly the curious things that were reflected in the party. I never imagined that class struggle existed there."

Emerging Bourgeoisies "What shook me most was the emergence of Liu Shao-chi as a bourgeois in the party," Mr. Liu continued, referring to the former head of state who was denounced as a "capitalist roader" in the Cultural Revolution. "I could not sleep all night."

But when Mr. Liu discovered that poor peasants in one of his production teams that included no former landlords were devoting their private plots and had abandoned their collective fields, he began to see the light.

Although the Communists' takeover had seemingly wiped out the landlords "like ants in a hot frying pan," Mr. Liu wrote, "they are still longing for the power in our hands and trying by all means to seek agents in the party." Class struggle, Mr. Liu concluded, goes on indefinitely, as Chairman Mao says.

Although China does not admit to a population problem, Peking enforces a serious birth-control program that for years has kept the annual population growth rate steady at 2 percent. Now there are indications that the authorities hope to get it even lower.

Among the measures the regime has used are the raising of the permissible age for marriage, for men to 23 and for women to 25, the distribution of free contraceptives, and economic sanctions including cutbacks in food rations for families with a third child.

Some Holdouts Noted In some areas Peking has achieved remarkable results. According to a recent broadcast from Kiangsu Province, the birth rate in Nantung District has dropped from 1 percent in 1972 to 0.65 percent last year.

Evidently, however, there are still some holdouts. A report last month by the Shanghai No. 5 Iron and Steel Plant said that among the factory's 6,000 workers hired since the Cultural Revolution some were "influenced by the bourgeois concept of love" and "some undesirable tendencies have popped up."

To counteract these, the factory has set up a late-marriage and family-planning workshop, and the young workers have pledged not to "squander their youth."

"In this atmosphere of insu-curity, the cousin of a policeman is worth the life of five people," said O Jornal do Brasil. "Police efficiency seems to be reserved for cases closest to the police caste."
But another leading daily,
O Globo, may have come closest to the mark by suggesting that "the death squad flourishes because of the tolerance and even enthusiasm that it enjoys in some sectors of public opinion."
The squad traces its birth to the 1950's, but its most intense activity has taken place since 1964 when a police detective, Milton Le Coq, was gunned down by a criminal he was trying to apprehend.
At Mr. Le Coq's funeral, attended by hundreds of his colleagues, open vows were made to kill 10 criminals for every policeman who lost his life. The police have far surpassed this initial target.

Crime and Competition Concerned government officials and judges have pointed out that in many cases the victims are criminals whose activities place them in competition with corrupt policemen.
But the death squad has sought public support by claiming to be a last resort against crime waves and supposedly lenient treatment of criminals in court.

The argument is especially alluring to many of the three million residents of the Lowlands, a collection of disorderly shantytowns that underlines the unequal distribution of wealth despite the so-called Brazilian economic miracle.
Once a vast orange grove,
the Lowlands are now overpopulated with migrants from the northeast who came in search of industrial jobs.
Squat, dilapidated buildings and wooden shacks, are jammed along mud-clogged side streets. Only 10 percent of the homes have running water or connections to a central sewage system.

Malnutrition is widespread and health care are so bad that the local medical authorities estimate infant mortality is 40 percent. In Nova Iguacu, the local military draft board reported that it rejected 60 percent of the potential conscripts for health reasons.
Nova Iguacu, with 1.3 million residents, is the largest city in the Lowlands. More than 90 percent of the work force earns the legal minimum wage or less, and delinquency is un-rampant among the unemployed.

"You can divide the population into two parts," said Antonio Dias, a 32-year-old worker. "There are those who have been assaulted, and those who are going to be. That's why I think the police are doing well by killing."

But many residents decline to even discuss the death squad. "Apprehension runs so deep that some do not even dare claim the bodies of relatives slain by the death squad for fear of further reprisals."

The old cemetery in Mara-piau, a few miles from Nova Iguacu, is known as the death squad cemetery. During the last three months, 32 unclaimed, bullet-ridden bodies were buried there.
Investigator Is Sent
As the death squad murders rose sharply last week, the state government in Rio de Janeiro decided to send its chief homicide investigator, Heibert Murtinho, to the Lowlands to try to put a stop to the killings.

"We receive you here with pride," said Pericles Gonçalves, the police chief of São João de Meriti, in a welcoming speech.
"This house is yours, and so are the dead," he added.
The bodies of 12 more death squad victims have appeared in

can Republic, June 6 (AP)—
Secretary of State Henry A.
Kissinger opened his trip to Latin America today with an appeal for preservation of human rights, an issue expected to dominate the eight-day journey.
"We of the Americas have a special obligation to ourselves and the world to maintain and advance international standards of justice and freedom,"
Mr. Kissinger said at a luncheon given by Joaquín Balaguer, President of the Dominican Republic.
"Human rights must be preserved, cherished and defended in this hemisphere," he said.
"For if they cannot be preserved, cherished and defended here where the rights and the promise of the individual have played such a prominent historical role, then they are in jeopardy everywhere."
The speech foreshadowed the stand Mr. Kissinger intends to take at the meeting of the Organization of American States in Santiago, Chile, where a report on human rights in the hemisphere is known to contain an indictment of the Junta in Chile.
Mr. Kissinger said he would propose a stronger role for the Inter-American Human Rights Commission. He gave no details but it was understood he would suggest that it hold meetings and issue reports on a regular basis.

He also pledged United States support for Latin America's economic well-being, both through a liberalized trading system and in helping to stabilize the prices of commodities such as sugar, coffee, tin and copper. He gave no specifics.
The Secretary said he would make concrete proposals in Santiago in three areas of special concern to Latin America —trade, the transfer of technology and regional cooperation. He pledged that the United States would press the trade interests of Latin America at international negotiations next month in Geneva.

Mr. Kissinger's second trip to Latin America in four months coincides with mounting suppression of leftists in Argentina and Uruguay, outbreaks of violence in Brazil and Mexico and continuing political repression in Chile.
Approximately 300 prisoners in Chile have been released since William E. Simon, the Secretary of the Treasury, visited Santiago last month.
But opponents of the military government say scores of other arrests, have taken place.

Mr. Kissinger planned to travel to Santa Cruz, Bolivia, to spend the night and have breakfast tomorrow with President Hugo Banzer Suárez.

Kissinger Reported Ready To Seek Full Peking Ties

TOKYO, June 6 (UPI)—John K. Fairbank, the China scholar, said today that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger might visit Peking in September to begin negotiations toward full diplomatic recognition of China.
The Harvard University professor told the newspaper Asahi of Tokyo that a necessary condition for such a visit was President Ford's nomination.

"It is fully possible that Secretary of State Kissinger may go to Peking in September if President Ford wins the Republican nomination," Asahi quoted Mr. Fairbank as saying.

Lights and Cameras Hunt Loch Action

By JOHN NOBLE WILFORD DRUMNADROCHIT, Scotland, June 6—A full array of camera and lights is now operating in the murky depths of Loch Ness, the electronic eyes in the investigation this summer to determine the nature of the mysterious creatures believed to inhabit this Scottish lake.

It took the Academy of Applied Science/New York Times Loch Ness Expedition nearly all of this cool, blustery day to complete the camera "splashes."

But by 6:30 P.M., after days of preparations and hours in wind-tossed boats, members of the party could gather before a small television screen, at the shore control station and catch a glimpse of the underwater world of Loch Ness.

"It's still a spit and elastic-band rig," remarked Dr. Robert H. Rines, the expedition leader. "But it's all right. It's working. Who knows, it could happen tonight."

Problems With Rigs

His comments alluded to some of the problems encountered while deploying the two camera rigs from the Hunter, a 23-foot cabin cruiser serving as the expedition's work platform at the loch, 300 feet off Temple Pier. It took some feverish improvisation, with lines and wood blocks and metal poles, to insure that the rigs remained level and in a few of each other at a depth of 35 feet.

And what could happen tonight, or perhaps some day or night soon, is the appearance of a creature. Leaders of the expedition are optimistic.

Because of the way the cameras are deployed, it is hoped that should such an appearance come it would be seen immediately by an observer at the television monitor in the expedition's control station.

The underwater television camera operates continuously. In the event of a sighting, a set of stereoscopic cameras and a Polaroid instant camera would be switched on to get more and perhaps better pictures of the action.

Camera Lowered

Early this afternoon, the 16-millimeter elapsed-time camera with color film was lowered off the bow of the Hunter. Two yellow ropes attached to the steel rig, with the camera and a bright strobe light, were secured to the side of the boat. The camera is set to take a picture automatically every 15 seconds. In four submersions to date it has taken 4,000 pictures. These are yet to be processed.

The other rig, to which the television, stereo and Polaroid cameras are attached, was much heavier and more difficult to deploy. When it was heaved off the boat, near the stern, the hunter listed sharply. Concrete-block ballast was added later to compensate for the weight of the rig.

After considerable shore-to-ship shouting and hand signaling, all necessary to make fine adjustments in the camera positions, Dr. Harold E. Edgerton of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who was monitoring the TV screen on shore, reported that the elapsed-time camera was in view of the television, bobbing and turning slightly.

Dr. Edgerton wants to see the elapsed-time camera on the screen at all times—because he believes it acts as "bait." In previous years something came up to the camera attracted either by the flashing strobe light or the sound of the electric motor, and bumped it several times. This was indicated by the sudden shifts in the angle of pictures, even on days and nights when the loch was dead calm.

150 in Nepalese Village Killed by a Landslide

KATMANDU, Nepal, June 6 (UPI)—An early-morning landslide swept down on a sleeping village in central Nepal and killed approximately 150 persons, the national press agency reported today.

The agency said army and police rescuers were dispatched to the village of Pahire Phedi, 90 miles west of here, where the disaster struck Friday. They had recovered 40 bodies by noon yesterday, it said.

The landslide, one of the worst recorded in this Himalayan kingdom, also injured six persons. They were being treated in a hospital in the nearby tourist resort of Pokhara, the report said.

Eight houses were reported buried or swept away by the landslide.

HABITAT EXPLORES CONTROL OF LAND

Poor Nations Say Revision of Property Rights Might Improve Conditions

By GLADWIN HILL

Special to The New York Times
VANCOUVER, British Columbia, June 6—"Land, because of the crucial role it plays in human settlements, cannot be treated as an ordinary asset, controlled by individuals and subject to the pressures and inefficiencies of the market."

With that concept as a point of departure, representatives of 135 nations embarked last week on a protracted debate about how conventional property rights might be changed to improve human living conditions.

The subject proved to be the thorniest of an immense array of possible reforms and innovations explored and argued as the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat) reached the halfway point in a two-week parley on worldwide community problems.

As with most recent United Nations assemblages, the meeting quickly shaped up as a quest for a common vocabulary by the industrialized nations and the far more numerous developing countries.

Key to Earthly Salvation

The third world, with about three-quarters of the globe's four billion people, has hundreds of millions of landless farmers and urban-fringe squatters to whom the redistribution of land—often concentrated in the hands of affluent minorities—seems the key to earthly salvation.

These nations dominated the preconference drafting of proposed "recommendations for national action" that included statements favoring public ownership of land, government regulation of land use, expropriation of profits from land speculation, and public "recapture" of increases in land value attributable to public development.

Such views found ready acceptance with the Soviet Union and other Communist countries, whose delegates said they had adopted such principles long ago.

Reactions among the advanced nations were mixed. Britain and Japan quietly endorsed the recommendations. Members of the United States delegation said that the proposals, in an American context, are not too different from national practice: that one-third the nation's land is "publicly owned" by the Federal Government; that the use of land is publicly controlled through such devices as community zoning, and that speculative profits are recaptured through taxes.

Canada Responds Directly

Canada's delegates, with the conference on their doorstep, were impelled to respond to the issues directly. They proposed some compromises, under which public ownership would be considered "one approach" to land problems; only "excessive" profits would be taken by government, and only "an equitable portion" of increased values due to public development would be recaptured by communities.

The verbal sparring was all tentative. The conference's declarations will not take final form until next Friday.

The underlying premise of the conference is that an inordinate proportion of the world's people now live in appalling impoverishment, in both urban and rural communities, and unless many basic changes are instituted at the community level, the prospective doubling of the world's population in the next 30 years will make conditions dangerously worse.

Land management is one of 10 half-dozen major divisions of community problems being dealt with simultaneously by three conference committees of the whole. The other subjects are national policies, community planning, community development, housing and community services and public participation in planning.

"Declaration" Expected
The conference is to produce a "declaration of principles," a set of recommendations for national actions, and a set of proposals for international cooperation, including realignment of various United Nations agencies now dealing with community problems piecemeal.

As the three committees deliberated, the conference's central full session marked time with a marathon of speeches by national spokesmen.

These produced nothing that appeared to startle spectators, except a now familiar gesture by Arab nations of walking out during the address Thursday of Israel's head delegate, the Interior Minister, Josef Burg.

Proceedings have been live-taped at the nongovernmental Habitat Forum, being held at a converted seaplane base 10 miles outside of town.

Exhibits, discussions and lectures there by such notables as Margaret Mead, the anthropologist, and Barbara Ward, the economist, have ranged from nuclear power to child care.

The forum theoretically is a channel for conveying grassroots citizen sentiments to the governmental deliberations, and selected forum representatives address the full session.

LAWYER ARRIVES FOR ANGOLA TRIAL

American in Luanda to Aid 2 Accused as Mercenaries

By MARVINE HOWE
Special to The New York Times

LUANDA, Angola, June 6—A criminal lawyer from Columbus, Ohio, arrived here early today to defend two Americans who are among 13 men facing trial as military mercenaries. The accused men fought against the nationalist faction that won the civil war in this former Portuguese colony.

The 13—three Americans, nine British nationals and one Irish national—are to go on trial sometime this week. Under Angolan law, they face a maximum penalty of death by firing squad.

It was in February that the forces of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola, supported by Cuban troops, captured the 13, who were fighting on the side of the pro-Western National Front for the Liberation of Angola. The Popular Movement has established a Government here at Luanda, the old colonial capital.

The lawyer, Robert Cesner Jr., arrived here with an assistant, Bill Wilson, a recent graduate of the American University, Washington, D.C. "I'm not in it for the money," Mr. Cesner told reporters, adding that he and Mr. Wilson had joined the case "for costs"—$5,000—and had already spent $3,000 in air fares.

Engaged by Families
Mr. Cesner said he had taken the case at the request of the families of two of the American prisoners, Gary Martin Acker, a 21-year-old former Marine from Sacramento, Calif., and Daniel Francis Gearhart, 34, a veteran of the Vietnam war who is from Washington.

Mr. Cesner said he was also ready to defend Gustavo Marcelo Grillo, an Argentine-born naturalized American whose Angolan officials have linked to the Mafia in New Jersey. He would also be willing to defend any other prisoners, Mr. Cesner said.

"These people are individuals and deserve to have their story told," the lawyer declared. The trial, which was to have begun Tuesday, was postponed by the Government here to give Mr. Cesner time to prepare his defense.

The Angolan Minister of Information, Luis de Almeida, who has declared that the 13 are guilty, was asked if this could be termed a "show trial." His response: "What do you call Nuremberg?"

First Trip to Africa
Mr. Cesner, who is 36 and has practiced for the Columbus firm of Tudor, Cloud & Cesner and in Tennessee, Michigan and Florida, said that this was his first trip to Africa. Another reason he is here, he said, is that he was a personal friend of a mercenary, George Bacon, who disappeared in northern Angola and is presumed to be dead.

He and Mr. Wilson said they had had contacts with the State Department, which was "sympathetic" to their decision to take this case. He is deeply interested, the Ohio lawyer said, in the definition of a mercenary, which he termed "one of the trickiest issues in international law."

Three British lawyers have declined to defend any of the mercenaries. The Government has appointed three Angolan lawyers to defend those prisoners who have no counsel. Britain, however, requested the right to send an observer for the proceedings, and permission was granted.

The observer, Hugh Byatt of the Foreign Office, arrived today on the plane from Lisbon that brought Mr. Cesner and Mr. Wilson.

LEADERS OF SABAH DIE IN PLANE CRASH

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia, June 6 (UPI)—A twin-engine plane crashed today while trying to land at Kota Kinabalu on the island of Borneo, killing all 11 persons aboard, including virtually the entire leadership of Sabah, the east Malaysian state formerly known as North Borneo.

Chief Minister Fuad Stephens, who took office in April, his son, and three Cabinet ministers died in the wreck. The Air Nomad, an Australian-built twin-turboprop plane went into a spin and crashed into the sea about two miles from the airport at Kota Kinabalu, the Sabah capital.

Sabah's Deputy Chief Minister, Harris Saleh, went on radio and television to announce the deaths. Mr. Saleh was swum in as Chief Minister by the Governor, Hamdan Abdullah.

SUDAN IS REPORTED WARY ON ERITREA

Khartoum Said to Have Sent Thousands of Troops to Border With Ethiopia

By BERNARD WEINRAUB
Special to The New York Times
LONDON, June 6—The Sudanese Government, worried about an offensive by Ethiopian peasants against Eritrean rebels, has sent thousands of troops along the border with Ethiopia, according to diplomatic sources in London.

The aim of the troop movement, carried out in recent weeks, is to thwart the peasant army from spilling over into the northeast Sudan, according to diplomats. It is believed that 3,000 to 5,000 Sudanese troops have been stationed along the Eritrean border between the town of Kassala and the Setit River.

Relations between the Sudan and Ethiopia have been strained in the last few years by the Eritrean issue. Ethiopian and Western diplomats in Addis Ababa believe that the Sudan has served as a staging area and arms-smuggling point for Eritrean rebels seeking autonomy from Ethiopia. In April, Khartoum protested sharply to Addis Ababa that Ethiopian planes had attacked targets—presumably Ethiopian refugees—in the Sudan.

Threat to Security Seen

President Gaafar al-Numeiry said last week that the Sudan would not allow its security to be threatened by the conflict in Eritrea. Ethiopia's northernmost province, which has the country's only seaports. The President appealed to the rebels to "sit at the conference table without preconditions to settle their dispute by dialogue instead of bullets."

The rebellion in Eritrea has been simmering for 14 years, with two insurgent groups pressing for autonomy from Ethiopia. The two guerrilla movements, the predominantly Moslem Eritrean Liberation Front and the Marxist-oriented Popular Liberation Forces, are supported by such Arab nations as Libya, Iraq and Syria, who are seeking a sphere of influence in the Red Sea.

The rebels, their strength estimated at 10,000 to 15,000 men, have seized a large share of the Eritrean countryside and tied up two divisions of Ethiopian troops—half the nation's army. To Ethiopia, the Eritrean problem is deeply significant, since the loss of Eritrea could loosen a wave of uprisings elsewhere in the nation. The secession of Eritrea would mean the loss of the Ethiopian ports of Assab and Massawa.

Last month Ethiopia rounded up 25,000 to 40,000 peasants—the figure remains uncertain—the central and northern provinces and moved them on trucks and buses to the Eritrean border to attack the rebels. The peasants, most of them Christians and most of them also illiterate, are armed with 45-year-old Italian rifles and machine guns. They have been told to wage a kind of holy war against the Eritreans, about half of whom are Moslems.

Moving on 2 Main Roads

Diplomatic reports reaching London say that there has been some fighting in Eritrea, but no large-scale clashes. The peasants have moved toward Eritrea on two main roads from Addis Ababa, one road passing through Meikale in Tigre Province, south of Eritrea. The other road is from Gondar, the old Ethiopian capital, to Ombajer, a town near the Sudanese border.

The Sudanese Army, occupied for years in fighting a rebellion in the southern part of the country, is said to be frightened about the flood of potentially undisciplined Ethiopian peasants moving along the border. The army has sent a large protective force to the area, according to diplomatic sources.

Compounding the Sudan's problems are more than 100,000 refugees from Eritrea who have sought refuge in northern Sudan, largely because of Ethiopian air and infantry attacks on Eritrean villages.

Western diplomats also report that Maj. Mengistu Haile Mariam, the first vice chairman and central figure of Ethiopia's provisional military government, returned recently from a secret trip to China. It is widely assumed by most diplomats that Major Mengistu went to Peking seeking to buy arms for the 40,000-man Ethiopian Army, which is equipped for the most part by the United States.

Israel Declines Comment On Report of Egyptian Gas

TEL AVIV, June 6 (Reuters)—Officials here declined to comment today on a report that Egypt has prepared nerve gas to use in a future war and that, to prevent panic, the Israeli public has not been told of counterpreparations.

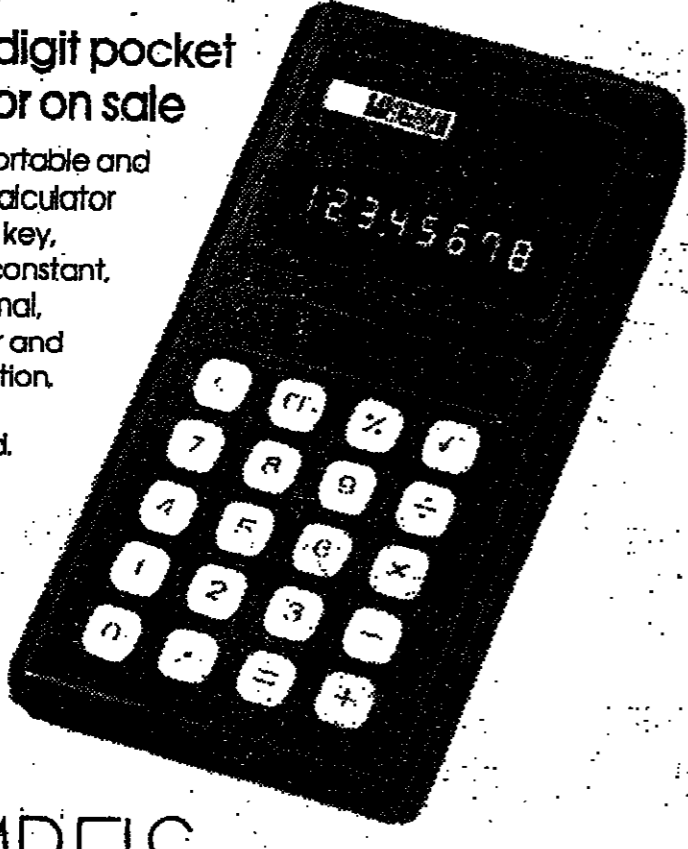

The report has published in The Boston Globe today and was referred to, without comment, by the Israeli radio.

Members of the Israeli public have known for some years that gas masks have been made locally and are being held ready for distribution if needed. Israeli soldiers and civil defense workers have also had routine training in antigas measures and the use of gas masks.

Mexico Sets a 200-Mile Limit, Closes the Gulf of California

MEXICO CITY, June 6 (UPI)—Mexico closed the 800-mile-long Gulf of California to foreign fishermen today and established a 200-mile "economic zone" restricting fishing and mining off its Pacific and Gulf coasts.

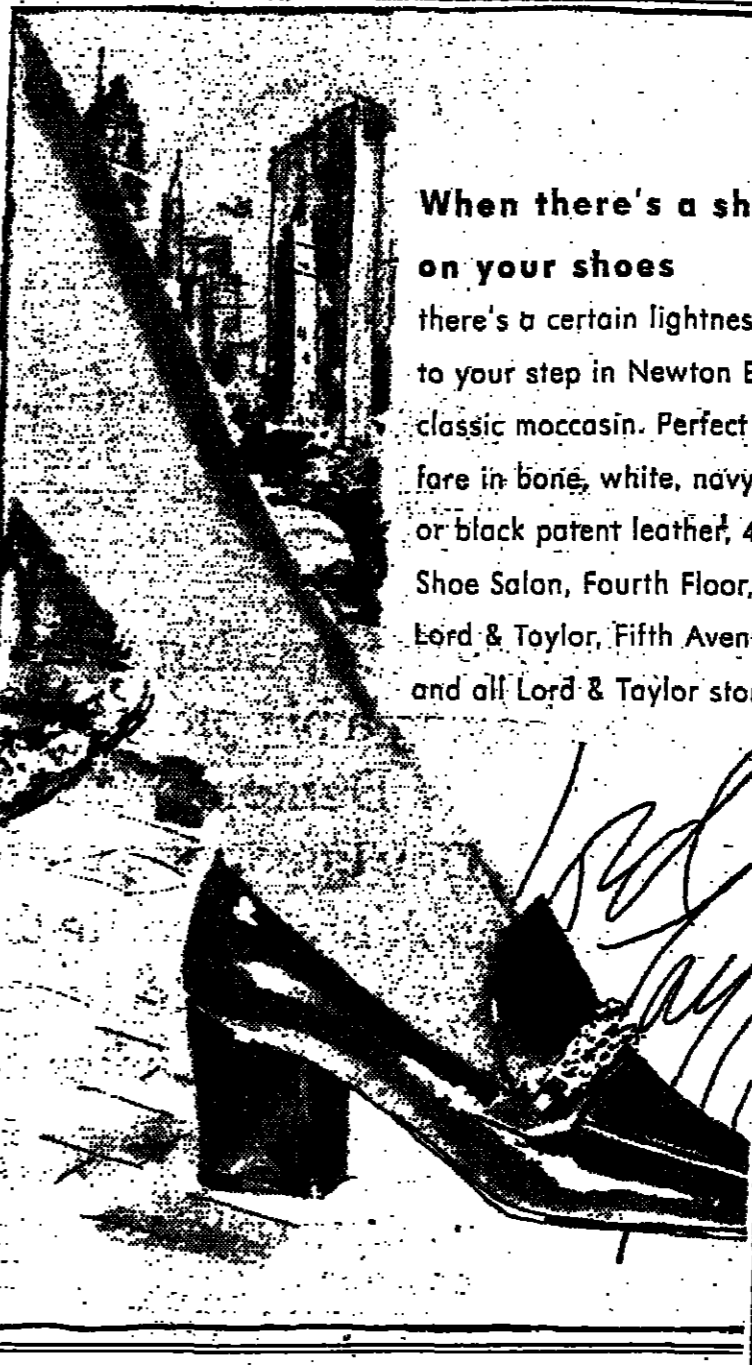

Jorge Castañeda, Mexico's Under Secretary of External Affairs, said the policy of "Mexicanization of the Gulf," established by constitutional amendment, "satisfies an old Mexican aspiration." Mr. Castañeda said foreign vessels could still use Mexican port facilities. Foreign fishing boats will be allowed within 200 miles of the Mexican coast only by Government permit, however, and will have to pay.

Foreign fishing rights will be reduced in the future, he said, moving toward a goal of "total exclusion." Mr. Castañeda said talks over fishing rights have already begun with the United States and Cuba.

Under the amendment, Mexico controls all "exploitation" of 200-mile zone, including harvest of marine life and minerals. The waters of the Gulf of California—the body of water between Baja California and mainland Mexico—will become "interior waters" under Mexican jurisdiction.

Mr. Castañeda said the Government would negotiate with foreign countries for rights to fish or harvest other sea life. Outsiders will have to pay a fee that will be "a real economic benefit" to Mexico, not just a symbolic payment in return for their fishing rights, he said.

Mr. Castañeda said that as Mexico's fishing abilities progressed it would reduce foreign fishing rights accordingly. "Therefore, eventually there will be a total exclusion of foreigners from the economic zone of Mexico," the Under Secretary said.

Assad's Gamble: New Thrust Into Lebanon Threatens Syria With Further Isolation in Arab World

By JAMES M. MARKHAM

Special to The New York Times
BEIRUT, Lebanon, June 6—President Hafez al-Assad's latest military thrust into Lebanon to make peace among warring factions was a gamble that risked further isolation of Syria in the Arab world and discontent within Syria itself. Egyptian dramatic recall yesterday of its diplomatic mission from Damascus lessers the risk taken by Assad, who earlier this year was riding a crest of enormous prestige following diplomatic successes on behalf of Palestinians.

In Damascus, it was widely eved that Mr. Assad's Government had been inching, never obliquely, toward a reconciliation with Egypt worked by Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. Saudi Arabia had already put considerable pressure on President Assad to come to terms with President Anwar el-Sadat, presently organizing a suspension of financial assistance Syria by oil-producing states the Persian Gulf.

The cutoff in aid has forced frantic slashes in this year's ambitious Syrian budget, just as neighboring Iraq, which in April halted the flow of crude to Syria's sole refinery, chose to apply economic pressure of its own against the rival atheist party regime in Damascus.

Shift Sought by Libya

Libya has been wooing Mr. Assad's Government, urging it to join a new alliance of "radical" Arab states. But one seeming price for entry into this alliance would be a reversal of Syria's activist policy in Lebanon, where it confronts Palestinian and leftist groups buttressed by Libya and Iraq.

Socialist Parley Spain Urges End of Political Curbs

HENRY GINIGER
Special to The New York Times
MADRID, June 6—The first convention of a socialist party permitted in Spain since the end of the Civil War in 1939 took place today with a demand that all opposition groups be given a voice in organizing a democratic system.

in the Lebanese crisis, Mr. Assad is equally determined not to have a government more radical than his own on his western flank.

Arab economic pressures continue. There is no sign of an organized opposition within the country to Mr. Assad, a masterful fence-straddler who has so far managed to reconcile left and right within the regime.

rests, however few, cannot be taken as a sign of strength. Throughout the Lebanese civil war, Syria has sought to preserve a kind of political equilibrium in the chaos here.

increasingly pointless violence. A kind of calm has again settled over this shattered, jumpy city. Lebanon's traditional warlords, experts at violence but not much good at making peace, are scrambling to find something resembling a "Lebanese solution" to the war before the Syrians impose a solution of their own.

Air Strikes and Shelling Reported in East Lebanon

supported a force calling itself "the Vanguard of the Lebanese Army," which has its headquarters at the main Lebanese Air Force base at Rayaq.

In the last few days, Hawker Hunter jets of the Lebanese Air Force—which was neutralized shortly after the civil war became nationwide late last year—are believed to have flown over Beirut. It seemed possible that they may have participated in the reported air strikes.

Palestinian sources said that early yesterday more Syrian trucks carrying troops had entered the country, crossing into Lebanon through the Syrian-held checkpoint at Masmara. But these reports could not be confirmed.

The same sources also said that Syrian officers had demanded that soldiers of the breakaway Lebanese Arab Army in the southern border town of Rashehya lay down their arms.

This, too, could not be confirmed. But there have been distinct signs in the last few days that the Syrians in the eastern Bekaa Valley have been putting pressure on officers and men of the Lebanese Arab Army to come over to the Damascus-sponsored Vanguard of the Lebanese Army.

The "Vanguard" appear to have headquarters at the Bekaa Air Force base of Rayaq, which is under Syrian control.

Lieut. Ahmed al-Khatib, the Moslem officer who forged the renegade Lebanese Arab Army in January, warned against "suspect elements" who were trying to convert its members to the Syrian side in Beirut.

The Damascus radio continued today to report cables of support being sent by Lebanese citizens to President Hafez al-Assad, thanking him for his "assistance" to the country.

But the radio did not announce the arrival last night in the Syrian capital of Maj. Abdul salam Jalloud, the Prime Minister of Libya, and Algeria's Minister of Education, Abdel Krim Ben Mahmoud.

The two men were reported attempting to negotiate a political resolution of the looming confrontation between Syrian troops and pro-Syrian elements in Lebanon, on the one hand, and Palestinian guerrillas and their leftist allies on the other.

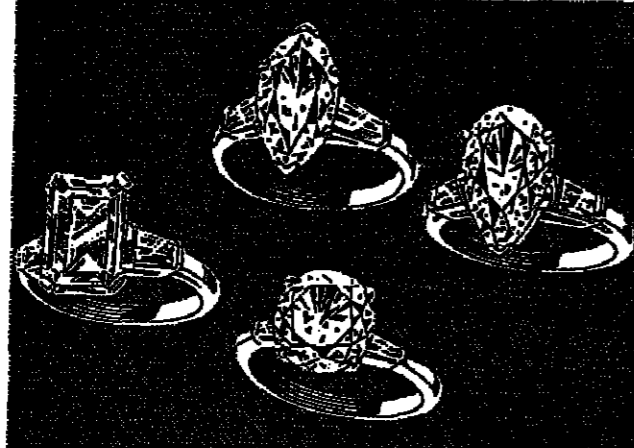

Libya and Iraq supply important financial and material support to the Palestinian-leftist alliance in Lebanon.

Al-Moharrer, a Beirut daily with Iraqi and Palestinian connections, reported that Iraq had moved troops to the Syrian border. If the report is true, the troops movement could be an attempt to put pressure on the Assad Government.

Meanwhile, the breakdown in Beirut's electric system has obliged the Power Authority to ration current to various neighborhoods in the city, but many areas now have power several hours during the day.

The French-language daily, L'Orient-Le Jour, printed a "homage to Fouad Birzi," the head of the national Electricite du Liban who managed to put together enough power to stave off a disaster in the capital.

reaching local newspapers asserted that Syrian troops were also moving forward on the Beirut-Damascus highway. There was no independent confirmation of this claim.

Since moving into the Bekaa valley, Syrian officers are reported to have issued ultimatums to Palestinian and leftist forces to withdraw from the village of Hezzertia which leads to Ain Tura.

Ain Tura commands access to the rightist-held Christian heartland to the west and the north, though efforts by the leftist-Palestinian forces to penetrate the region had been unsuccessful.

One apparent goal of the latest Syrian move into Lebanon has been to defuse areas of confrontation between the rivals in the 14-month-old civil war. Palestinians fear that another move to put them under Syrian control.

One apparent goal of the latest Syrian move into Lebanon has been to defuse areas of confrontation between the rivals in the 14-month-old civil war. Palestinians fear that another move to put them under Syrian control.

From Beirut, it was difficult to gauge the scale of the attacks, though some reports in an appeal to the Arab League, Mr. Kaddoumi also reported that Syrian forces had shelled Palestinian and leftist positions in the mountains.

According to the radio reports, one target of the air strikes was the leftist-held mountain-top town of Aintoura, which has been devastated.

Spain's New Politics Finding Noisy Outlet at Galician Un

By HENRY KAMM
Special to The New York Times

SANTIAGO DE COMPOSTELA, Spain, May 27—In the uncertainty in which Spanish political life is re-emerging while Generalissimo Francisco Franco's restrictions on politics remain in force, the universities have become havens of relative immunity. The police stay out, most of the time.

The university is a parliament of political life in Galicia," said a knowledgeable journalist in this venerable university town and place of pilgrimage since the Middle Ages. "It is a temple of debate."

The debate is carried on by a multiplicity of political organizations, most to the left of center and known by puzzling sets of initials. None of the groups are large in number, which leads more conservative professors and observers to say, perhaps with a pinch of wishful thinking, that while the noise level is high political interest is not very wide.

Cathedral of St. James in Santiago de Compostela, Spain

3 Categories of Students

Prof. Xosé Manuel Beiras Torrado of the economics department disagreed. An active member of the clandestine Socialist Party and teacher in the politically liveliest part of the university, he divides students into three categories.

The first, he said, is made up of politically engaged students belonging to a party or group; the second of those who follow politics closely without identifying themselves with a party, and the third of those who are uninterested.

Professor Beiras believes that the third group is numerically unimportant, the first small and the second composed of the large majority.

"Most students tend vaguely toward socialism," the professor said, emphasizing vaguely. His emphasis was born out by random conversations with students taking the evening air on the broad staircase leading to the plaza on the side of the great Cathedral of St. James, which spans all Spanish architecture from the Romanesque of the 12th century to the Baroque of the 18th.

What came across was a deep-seated unhappiness over the state of Spain, an ardent longing for social justice, a general belief that the answer lies in a form of socialism and a perplexity about what kind of socialism. One after the other, the students ticked off countries that designate themselves as socialist and rejected them as models.

Having lived only in a country where the political police are ever present, their concern with civil liberties is great. They feel that no socialist country satis-files that need, nor does any nonsocialist country correspond to their ideals of social justice. This leads to their hesitation in joining political movements and protracted discussions that end with hopeful expressions that the future Spain will be better.

"There is an incongruence between their level of interest and politicization and their level of information about the world," said Professor Beiras in explaining student vagueness.

Prof. Francisco Puy Muñoz of the law department, who interprets the political scene as a fight among many small groups while most of the students limit themselves to watching the bulls from the stands," has another explanation for the preponderance of nonparticipants.

"Galicians don't like to demonstrate and make noise," he said. "It is not easy to make them sign manifestos or join groups."

Compared with the three universities of Barcelona, where student political activity is the highest in Spain, Santiago is quiet but it is perhaps more typical of Spain in general.

Even at its lower level of politics, is a lively place. So lively, said Professor Beiras, that the period since Franco's death last November has not been normal educationally, leaving students ill-prepared for the examinations to come.

There has been a series of occupations of university buildings by left-wing students, culminating in March in the seizure for five days of the economics department. It ended with a falling-out between anarchists and Communists.

To show their disapproval of what they considered the anarchists' superciliousness, the Communists spent a night removing slogans from the walls. The following night, the anarchists covered the same walls with inscriptions translatable roughly as, "Communists clean, whiter than white."

More important than such student rivalries, according to knowledgeable observers, is that the university has become Galicia's most important forum of political debate.

To the visitor, Santiago looks like an innocent student's paradise. The narrow flagstoned streets are jammed to bursting with streams of raucous and jocular students. In many bars they drink eight-cent cups of country wine and nibble on cheap tidbits while watching bullfights on television. In small squares they play leapfrog and dance each other in medieval fountains.

But most evenings, in the university lecture halls, political parties present and defend their programs at crowded "panel discussions, which are actually political meetings."

The meetings are more or less openly advertised, with the announcements listing speakers whose political affiliations are well known without identifying their parties. Any one can attend. The Socialist Party recently held a meeting in which the topic, "Thinking about Galicia," was so displayed that the large capital letters of each line spelled "P.S.G."—The initials of the Socialist Party of Galicia.

Democracy and socialism, as well as recognition of the autonomist aspirations of this region and its distinctive language, Galician, are the principal themes of discussion. They are propagated also in many mimeographed leaflets.

The university authorities do not interfere, although the rector has the reputation of being strongly rightist. Local observance of the laissez-faire attitude is based on instructions from Madrid to avoid more violent unrest.

But as long as political activity is unlawful, participation contains a risk. Police informers are known to exercise close surveillance. A number of students have been arrested outside the university, held for several days for interrogation and fined when, for instance, they carried propaganda material.

Arrest, even when there is no fine, means that the student has a police file that leads to difficulties in obtaining a passport or foreign travel or a driver's license. It also means, in some

GISCARD CONFERS ON GAULLIST RIPT

Meets With Chirac in Bid to Assure Party on Defense and Capital Gains Tax

By JAMES F. CLARITY
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, June 6 — President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing and Prime Minister Jacques Chirac conferred in a secluded corner of southern France today in an apparent attempt to find a solution to the serious dissatisfaction that has arisen in the Gaullist Party over some of the President's programs and policies.

The dissension among the Gaullists, numerically the strongest group in Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's Coalition Government, flared last week over two issues—the proposed capital gains tax and the President's defense policy. But the dissatisfaction with the President among the Gaullists had been growing since last March, when the leftist opposition made sizable gains in nationwide local elections. Many Gaullist leaders blamed the President for the leftist gains. The Gaullists are also openly annoyed by the recent political tactics of another leader of a faction of the President's majority, Justice Minister Jean Lecanuet, who heads the Centrists.

As the two leaders met at Bregancon, a Presidential residence on the Mediterranean between Toulon and Cannes, there was widespread speculation among politicians and diplomats here that Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, leader of the Independent Republican Party, and Mr. Chirac, the nation's most prominent Gaullist, were trying to avert a political crisis. No official statements have been issued since the two leaders began their talks last night, and no one is expected until tomorrow night or Tuesday.

Speculation in Capital
While there was no information coming out of Bregancon, the speculation in Paris included solutions involving a vast revision of the capital gains legislation, the resignation of Mr. Chirac or the dissolution of the National Assembly by the President and the calling of new legislative elections two years before they are expected.

There were also reports circulating in the capital that the solution would be moderate, possibly involving a shuffling of cabinet ministers, giving the Gaullists more power in the Government.

The Gaullists' dissension erupted in public last week, first over an explanation of the Government's defense policy by the army chief of staff, Gen. Guy Mery. The general's statement in a magazine article that France was prepared, under certain conditions, to fight on the front line of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in the event of an attack on West Germany disturbed many Gaullists. While the statement was described by Mr. Giscard d'Estaing as representing no defense policy change, it was interpreted by many Gaullists as an erosion of the policy under which President Charles de Gaulle withdrew French forces from the military command of NATO 10 years ago.

Gaullists Oppose Tax Bill

Further trouble arose last week during the three days of heated debate on the President's capital gains tax. Many of the 174 Gaullists in the Assembly spoke against the measure and offered amendments to it, saying they could not vote for it in its present form. A large-scale defection of Gaullists in the vote on the capital gains tax could kill the legislation, one of Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's most favored efforts at reform. The leftist opposition in the Parliament is already united against the measure. Both the left and some Gaullists say the legislation has too many loopholes, which would result in heavy taxes on poor and middle-class people while the rich escaped.

The Gaullist dissatisfaction with Mr. Lecanuet arose from his maneuvers two weeks ago to create more cooperation between his own party, the Centrists, and the Independent Republicans, considered by some Gaullists as a potentially dangerous political snub. Since the crisis speculation arose here in recent days, Mr. Chirac, who was named three months ago by Mr. Giscard d'Estaing to unify and galvanize the majority, has said little, except that he is sure the Gaullist Party will emerge from the situation united and intact.

Smoking.

What are you going to do about it?

Many people are against cigarettes. You've heard their arguments. And even though we're in the business of selling cigarettes, we're not going to advance arguments in favor of smoking.

We simply want to discuss one irrefutable fact. A lot of people are still smoking cigarettes. In all likelihood, they'll continue to smoke cigarettes and nothing anybody has said or is likely to say is going to change their minds.

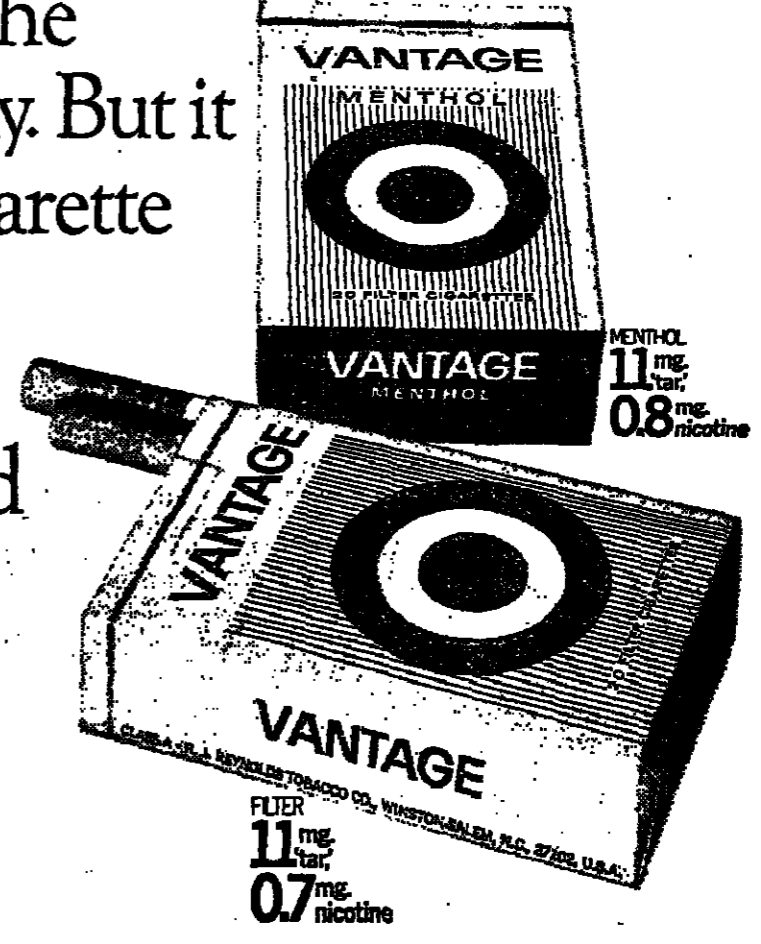

Now, if you're one of these cigarette smokers, what are you going to do about it? You may continue to smoke your present brand. With all the enjoyment and pleasure you get from smoking it. Or, if 'tar' and nicotine has become a concern to you, you may consider changing to a cigarette like Vantage.

(Of course, there is no other cigarette quite like Vantage.) Vantage has a unique filter that allows rich flavor to come through it and yet substantially cuts down on 'tar' and nicotine.

We want to be frank. Vantage is not the lowest 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you can buy. But it may well be the lowest 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you will enjoy smoking.

Vantage. It's the only cigarette that gives you so much taste with so little 'tar' and nicotine.

We suggest you try a pack.

Warning: The Surgeon General Has Determined That Cigarette Smoking is Dangerous to Your Health.

FILTER: 11 mg. "tar", 0.7 mg. nicotine, MENTHOL: 11 mg. "tar", 0.8 mg. nicotine, av. per cigarette, FTC Report APR. 76.

As India's Congress Party Meets, Old-Time Scrapping

By WILLIAM BORDERS
Special to The New York Times

NEW DELHI, June 6—Last weekend, as Prime Minister Indira Gandhi stood up to speak at the national convention of India's Congress Party, one of the 900 delegates, seated only a dozen rows away, turned to a companion and whispered: "I've seldom felt so close to power, and at the same time so far away from it."

The comment, quickly lost in the din of applause for the Prime Minister, reflected a basic change that has overtaken the 90-year-old party in the 11 months of India's new political order.

On the one hand, with the withering of the opposition parties and the imprisonment of their leaders, the Congress Party is more powerful now than it has ever been before. It dominates Parliament completely, and its supporters run all 22 state governments.

Rank-and-File Decline

But on the other hand, as more and more of the national decision-making is concentrated in the Prime Minister's inner circle, the rank and file of the party—and even some of its leaders—have much less to say than they used to about the way India is governed.

In the past, Congress Party conventions were often contentious affairs, with hostile debate and sharp questioning of the leadership, sometimes accompanied by hooting and jeering.

This time, however, in two days of meetings in a modernistic pink-and-gray auditorium in downtown New Delhi, there was not a murmur of dissent. Here is the way D. K. Barooah, the party president, summed up the mood of the moment: "People have faith in the Congress, and in the leadership of Mrs. Gandhi. Both are one and the same thing."

As the speeches droned on, state executives, party officials and even Cabinet ministers pressed up eagerly for whispered consultations with members of the group that actually makes most major decisions these days: Mrs. Gandhi, her 29-year-old son, Sanjay, and half a dozen intimates, including Mr. Barooah and Defense Minister Bansi Lal.

One reason that the party has yielded so much of its power to the Prime Minister is that there is no obvious alternative. In her 10 years in office, Mrs. Gandhi, a shrewd political tactician, has blocked the emergence of opposition factions and the ascension of rivals.

When the party split in 1969, she managed to hold most of it on her side, and the leader of the other faction, 80-year-old Morarji R. Desai, was one of the first anti-Government figures arrested in the crackdown last June.

Now that it is so obviously the winning side in India, the Congress Party is attracting new members to its bandwagon, and many of the old-timers in it find it comfortable and attractive to retain at least the trappings of power, which may also help to explain the lack of protest against the change.

Another reason for the Prime Minister's success was reflected in the convention mural depicting her and her father, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru, superimposed on the Indian national colors—Mrs. Gandhi's personal background is intertwined with the Indian nation, all the way back to her earliest childhood, when she used to line up her dolls to march in imagined battles against the British.

Mrs. Gandhi's father and her grandfather, a Kashmiri aristocrat named Motilal Nehru, both served as president of the party, as she did. And all three went to jail under its banner back in the days when the Indian National Congress was leading the fight for independence from Britain.

This family heritage, which is recalled frequently in today's political speeches, is one reason that many people suggest the possibility of Sanjay Gandhi's succeeding his mother one day.

The Congress Party, which has dominated Indian politics throughout this century, has a special mystique symbolized by the crudely woven white cothens, known as khadi, that its members wear.

Mohandas K. Gandhi, India's national hero, popularized khadi 50 years ago as an emblem of simplicity and independence, and for Congress Party leaders it is still virtually a uniform, along with the little white Gandhi cap named for him.

Prime Minister Gandhi wore a sari made of white khadi the other day when, evoking the spirit of Gandhi the nation-builder (to whom she is not related), she told the party leaders about her plans for "changing some parts of the Constitution which were coming in the way of fuller democracy and fuller life for the people."

VOTE FOR UDALL DELEGATE

in the New Jersey Democratic Primary

There are 3 full slates running

- ONE WON'T TELL WHO THEY'RE FOR
- ONE WON'T TELL WHAT THEY'RE FOR
- ONE IS FOR MORRIS K. UDALL

Udall's Record Shows What He's For CIVIL RIGHTS

As student body president, Morris Udall and his brother helped bring an end to racial segregation at the University of Arizona in the 1940's.

In the floor fights for the Civil Rights Act and the Voting Rights Act in the 1960's, Congressman Udall helped lead the progressive forces of the Democratic Party.

He supported the federal Open Housing law, and has given steady backing to the federal food stamps plan. He fought every Nixon Administration attempt to disassemble the anti-poverty program and to weaken anti-discrimination laws.

ISRAEL

Morris Udall is a consistent supporter of U.S. military and economic aid to help Israel deter aggression from the Arab nations that have purchased $12 billion in arms in the last two years.

To bring real peace to the Middle East, he has consistently called for face-to-face negotiations between the Arabs and Israelis. And for an end to the spiraling arms race in the Middle East.

He condemned the UN anti-Zionism resolution. And was an early sponsor of the Holtzman-Rodino bill to prevent American companies from cooperating with the Arab boycott.

THE ENVIRONMENT

The name Morris Udall is virtually synonymous with Environment.

He secured strict anti-pollution standards on the Alaska Pipeline Project. Wrote the landmark legislation to stop the destruction of land by strip-mining for coal. Introduced the first House measure ever on land use planning.

He supported every clean air and water measure to come in the last 15 years. Opposed the SST. Attacked the decision to give jet land in the U.S. Helped establish numerous national sponsored legislation to preserve our nation's wild and scenic areas.

ENERGY REFORM

Morris Udall co-authored the Deconcentration Act, which requires to give up all but one phase. They must choose whether to transport, or market oil products. And they must give up their impeding energy industries, such as iron.

More than a year ago, Morris Udall national and regional hearings to a risks and high costs of nuclear reaction.

He authored and guided through Non-Nuclear Energy Act, the first in the history to research and develop technologies to harness the power of earth, wind, and tides.

JOBS

Morris Udall supported every jobs aid Ford vetoed. He is committed to employment and has given his full support to the Employment Act.

He has supported the CETA jobs measures in Congress.

Mo Udall has proposed an Urban Conservation Corps Act to put 500,000 young people to work in our cities.

Teton Dam Among Those Not Covered by Safety Act

By BEN A. FRANKLIN
 Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 6—After two disastrous dam breaks in 1972, Congress rushed into law a safety act, the first Federal law whose purpose was "protecting human life and property" from the collapse of the estimated 28,000 dams and impoundments in the United States.

But the law excluded from its provisions the several hundred huge dams operated by the Interior Department's Bureau of Reclamation, among them is the Teton Dam, which burst yesterday. The Federal agencies that build dams—the Bureau of Reclamation and the Tennessee Valley Authority—told Congress that they had safety inspection programs of their own. Details on those procedures were unavailable today. Interior Department officials who could be reached here today, however, could not say from records available on a weekend when—or whether—the Teton Dam had been inspected for stability before the initial fill that eroded its flank yesterday, sending a muddy wall of water down an Idaho valley on the upper Snake River.

And nearly four years after passage of the Dam Safety Act, in July 1972, not one of the thousands of other dams that Congress thought would be checked by the United States Army Corps of Engineers has been inspected.

An Army spokesman said tonight that the corps' safety inspection survey, required to have been sent to Congress by July 1, 1974, under the 1972 law, had never been transmitted because it is "incomplete."

The official cause of the Teton dam break was to be determined by Harold Arthur, the director of the bureau's Dam Design Construction Center at Denver. He was reported to be at the dam site today and could not be reached.

The Idaho disaster, however, raised many of the same questions about dam safety that inspired the passage of the so-far ineffective 1972 law.

Then, it was the collapse of dams at Buffalo Creek, W. Va., on Feb. 26, 1972, and at Rapid City, S.D., during a downpour the following June 8, that brought Congressional action that was supposedly to require the immediate safety examination of existing non-Federal dam structures. Some 125 persons died in each of those floods.

The 1972 act, sponsored in the House of Representatives by Robert E. Jones, the Alabama Democrat who heads the powerful, dam-building Public Works Committee, was rushed to President Nixon on July 25 of that year, and he reluctantly signed it into law on Aug. 7.

The White House statements of that day included one calling the dam safety law "unfortunate" because it was "enacted hastily, without benefit of committee hearings, advice from the concerned agencies of the executive branch or comments by the affected states."

Delaying Tactics and Quirks in Rules May Help Hays Retain Authority

By RICHARD D. LYONS

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 6—Representative Wayne L. Hays faces four tests of power this week but quirks in the rules of the House may be working in his favor and his use of delaying tactics could help him weather the Elizabeth Ray scandal and hang on to most of his Capitol Hill empire.

The Ohio Democrat stands for his party's renomination in the primary election in his district on Tuesday. On Wednesday he will be the focus of three House Committee meetings, one called to investigate him as chairman and one to take from his another chairmanship.

June 16, when the House Democratic caucus will meet to vote on a resolution to oust him from the two most important of his four committee chairmanships.

Technically, however, the caucus cannot do this and an ouster vote must be put to the full House of Representatives, which would again delay attempts to discipline Mr. Hays further and would allow him time to muster support.

Addressing a Democratic rally in Smithfield, Ohio, last night, Mr. Hays was reported to have called Mr. O'Neill the "so-called Majority Leader" and added that Mr. O'Neill who probably will succeed Representative Carl Albert as Speaker, "wants all the power in his hands."

Mr. Hays has only taken office in the primary — Nick B. Karmick, a court bailiff who has challenged the 12-term Representative three times and lost. However, Mr. Hays is expected to have more formidable opposition in the November election from Ralph R. McCoy, who will be his Republican challenger. The next test of will between Mr. Hays and Mr. O'Neill and the other Democratic leaders comes Wednesday in meetings of the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, the House Administration Committee and the Democratic National Congressional Committee.

The standards panel, usually called the ethics committee, began an investigation last week into whether Mr. Hays through his employment of Miss Ray at a $14,000-a-year Federal job violated Federal law and House rules dealing with payroll padding. Miss Ray says she was hired solely to be Mr. Hays's mistress.

Mr. Hays has called a meeting of the Democratic Congressional Committee, which distributes campaign funds to incumbents running for re-election, also for Wednesday. He offered last week to step down "temporarily" from the chairmanship, pending the outcome of the investigations, and proposed Representative Thomas E. Morgan of Pennsylvania as interim chairman.

Also on Wednesday, although it could be delayed until later, the House Administration Committee is to meet at Mr. Hays's suggestion to discuss his chairmanship. He has accused the second-ranking Democrat, Representative Frank Thompson Jr. of New Jersey, of plotting to take over the chairmanship. Mr. Hays has offered to step aside, again temporarily, in favor of the Rept. of Pennsylvania as interim chairman. Mr. Hays has offered to step aside, again temporarily, in favor of nothing but be his mistress.

When he was asked by reporters for the umpteenth time last week whether Mr. Hays should be stripped of his committee chairmanships, the Speaker avoided the question again, replying, "I shouldn't influence the members of the [Democratic] caucus one way or the other."
Mr. O'Neill, however, was quick to recognize the potential damage that the Hays scandal could cause the party. He demanded that Mr. Hays resign his chairmanship and promised, if the Ohioan refused, to personally lead the fight to oust him.
When representatives of Mr.
Hays went to Mr. O'Neill last week to say that Mr. Hays still had strong support among House Democrats and to suggest that Mr. O'Neill should agree to a compromise on the matter, Mr. O'Neill, in effect, told them to go back to their abacus.

"I laid the cards on the table," Mr. O'Neill told a reporter afterward. "Hays doesn't have 30 votes in the caucus." Nearly all Democrats interviewed about Mr. Albert in recent weeks had good words for the Speaker, and some were lavish with their praise. They cited his firm commitment to civil rights and civil liberties and noted that he had encouraged procedural reforms that led to a dispersal of power in the House.
"Collective Sigh of Relief" Nonetheless, the prevailing view of the Democrats in the House was summed up in an interview last month by a senior Representative from the Middle West. "I think," he said,
"that if the Speaker announced tomorrow he was retiring, there would be a collective sigh of relief."
Mr. O'Neill appears to have a lock on the Speakership next year. He already has pledged of support from more than half the Democrats in the House, and no one seems likely to challenge him for the party's leadership position. He could thus lose out only if Republicans, who now hold only one seat of every three, were to gain a majority in the House in the November elections. Not even the most optimistic Republicans believe that there is a chance of that large a swing.

Mr. O'Neill's role as Speaker would depend to some extent on who is elected President in the fall. If a Democrat wins, the Speaker's job would be to guide the new administration's program through Congress. If a Republican is elected, Mr.
O'Neill's function would be to lead the opposition, whichever is the case, Mr. O'Neill's colleagues have no doubt that he would be the most forceful advocate in the Speaker's chair since Sam Rayburn died 15 years ago.

Luce, Head of Con Ed, Gets $40,000 Raise

The Consolidated Edison Company, which on Friday asked the Public Service Commission for a 10.4 percent increase in electric rates, last month raised the salary of its chairman, Charles F.
Luce, by 20 percent, to $200, 000 a year, a con Ed spokesman said Saturday night.
The spokesman said that the utility's board of trustees voted at its monthly meeting in May to increase Mr. Luce's salary by $40,000 annually in order to make his salary "competitive" with those of heads of other utilities. The spokesman said Mr.
Luce had refused four other offers of salary increases in the last 10 years.

7 States Complete Selection of Delegates

By The Associated Press
Republicans and Democrats in seven states completed their selection of delegates for the national conventions over the weekend, and another state began its selection process.
Forty-two delegates, some previously apportioned on the basis of state primary results, were selected to cast votes for Ronald Reagan and 27 supporters of President Ford were chosen in Virginia, Tennessee, Louisiana, Maryland and Colorado. Five uncommitted Republican delegates were named.
On the Democratic side, 13 delegates backing Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, 11 supporting Jimmy Carter, 6 for Senator Robert C.
Byrd of West Virginia, 2 for Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona and 6 uncommitted delegates were named in Kansas, West Virginia, Minnesota and Maryland.
With the weekend votes, Mr.
Ford now has 826 delegates,

Mr. Reagan 695, Mr. Carter
916, Mr. Udall 309½ and Mr.
Humphrey 80½.
At a meeting of state central committee leaders in Norfolk, Va., Mr. Ford's supporters refused a recommendation to elect a slate of 12 Reagan delegates and one Ford delegate to fill 13 contested slots, and insisted on nominating their own slate from the floor. In a two-hour roll-call ballot, all 13 places were filled with Reagan delegates.
Tennessee's 43-member Republican delegation will consist of 22 Reagan supporters and 21 Ford supporters after the award Saturday of 7 at-large delegates each to Mr.
Ford and Mr. Reagan. The award by the state party was based on results of the May 25 Tennessee primary.
Also based on results of the state primary on May 18, Maryland Republicans awarded all 19 at-large candidates to President Ford. The 43-member

Maryland delegation is bound by law to vote unanimously for Mr. Ford through the first two ballots.
In Louisiana on Saturday,
Mr. Reagan won 15 of the 17 at-large delegates selected. The other 2 were uncommitted. The 41 members of the Louisiana
Republican delegation will 38 Republican backers and five uncommitted delegates.
And in Colorado, Republicans chose the first of their 31 Republican national delegates, giving Mr. Reagan all 3 of those selected at district convention on Saturday. The remaining 28 Colorado Republican delegates will be chosen later at district conventions.
Thirteen of the 16 delegates chosen yesterday to complete Minnesota's 65-member delegation to the Democratic National Convention went to Senator Humphrey. Three of those chosen at the state convention in Duluth were uncommitted.

Carter Gets an Ovation After Assuring Jews in Jersey on His Religious Views

By CHARLES MOHR
Special to The New York Times

ELIZABETH, N. J., June 6—Jimmy Carter was interrogated before an audience of Jews today about his evangelical Christian beliefs and expressed his belief in the "absolute and total" separation of church and state in a pluralistic society.

Whether his words will quell the disquiet expressed by some American Jews about his "born again" Southern Baptist religion remains to be seen, but the audience that heard him today greeted his words with loud applause and with a standing ovation when he left the hall.

The occasion was reminiscent of, although not nearly so heralded and formal as, the appearance of F. Kennedy at Dallas in 1960 to calm fears about the prospect of a Roman Catholic President.

The former Georgia Governor who holds a wide lead in the race for the Democratic Presidential nomination, appeared this morning before about 2,000 people at the Jewish Educational Institute in Elizabeth to give a formal and carefully prepared speech outlining his views on religion and the United States policy toward Israel and the Middle East.

In that speech he expressed an "unwavering" support for Israel's right to exist as a Jewish national state and called for "early movement" toward a full and comprehensive settlement of the Middle East problem and a shift away from the step-by-step diplomacy practiced since 1973 by Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

In a question period after the speech, a man in the audience said that journalists had written that "Jimmy Carter is identified with many members of his church who have a long history of anti-Semitism and anti-Communism." He then asked, "Do you think this applies to you and how do your beliefs relate to many members of your church?"

Mr. Carter, who was wearing a blue velvet yarmulke, said: "One of the major problems that I have faced in this elec-the Nation" that his own children had always attended integrated schools and that he hoped no school would deny access to children on the basis of race.

But he said that "individuals have rights" and that he believed such rights included the choice of a segregated private school by a parent "willing to pay whatever the cost might be."

It would be "totally different," he told the interviewers, if the schools were recipients of Government funds or sought and obtained Federal tax advantages.

"I certainly would not, under those circumstances, go along with segregated schools," he said.

To Ask Legislation

Mr. Ford repeated on the news program his pledge to ask Congress "in the very near future" to enact legislation limiting the scope of Federal court jurisdiction in remedying public school desegregation. He said Attorney General Edward H. Levi had assured him that such legislation would be constitutional.

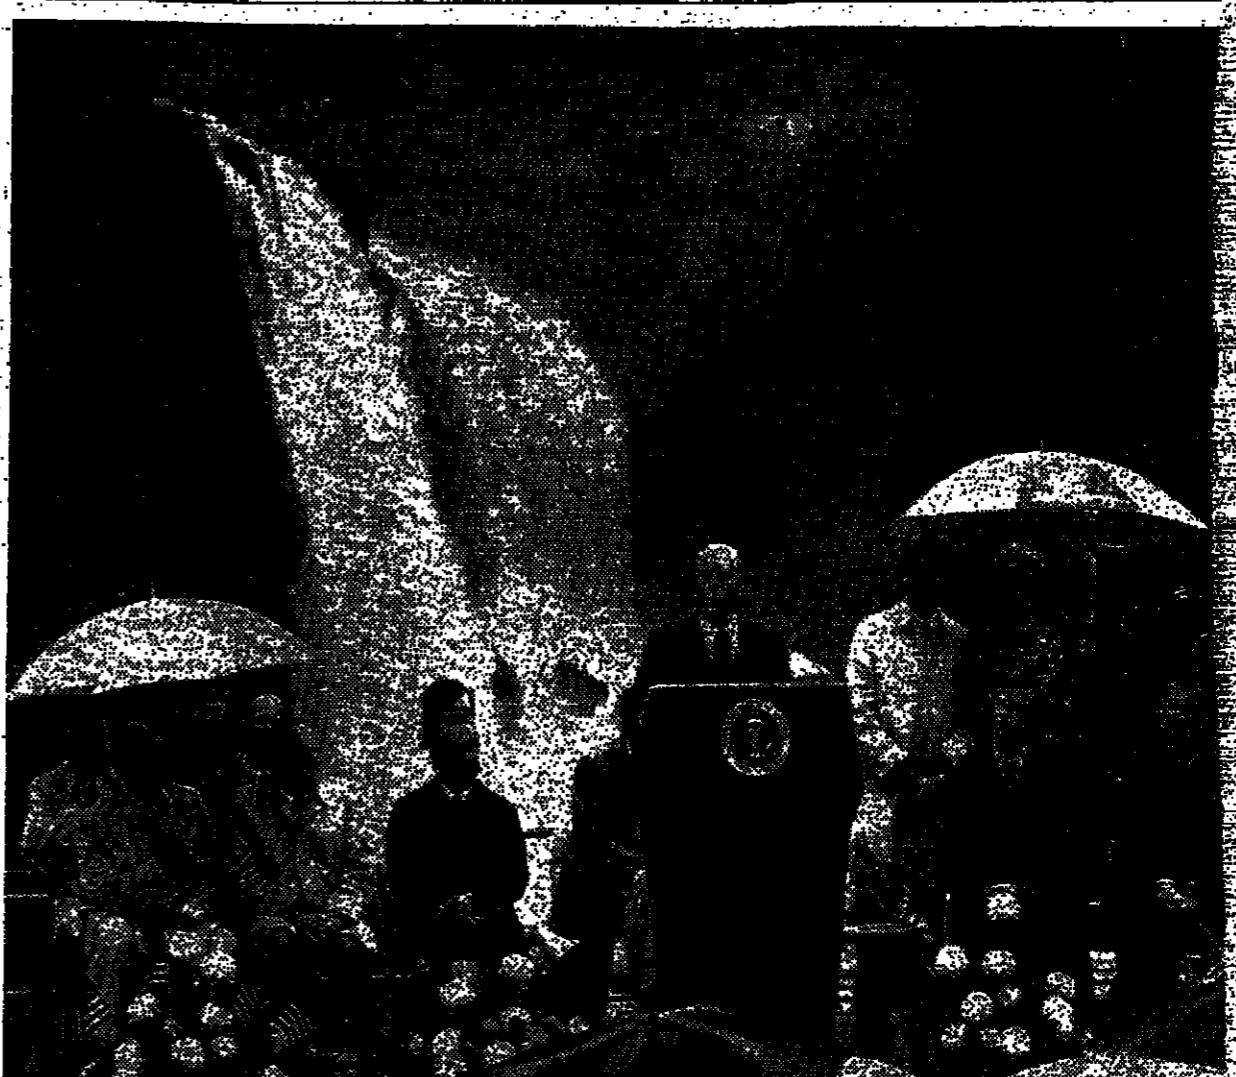

In remarks he had prepared for delivery to the Northern Ohio chapter of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, Mr. Ford said that the group members were "striving to make brotherhood more than just a phrase."

His text made no mention of the busing controversy.

Jimmy Carter, the leading candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination, has maintained that any Federal grants or claimed a Federal tax advantage as an educational institution should be forced to have a nondiscriminatory admissions policy.

Mr. Ford's journey to New Jersey and Ohio was intended to strengthen his chances to nearly break even with Ronald Reagan, his rival for the Republican Presidential nomination, in the three final primaries on Tuesday.

The President is expected to win most of the 67 New Jersey and 97 Ohio delegates at stake but to lose all 167 delegates involved in California's winner-take-all contest.

Even so, Mr. Ford told the television interviewers, he expects to do "quite well" in California, against the former Governor, and, despite a poll showing him substantially behind Mr. Reagan, he thinks there is "an opportunity to win California."

The President's political strategists began yesterday airing television and radio commercials in California that implied that Mr. Reagan would lead the nation to war in Rhodesia if he became President.

Mr. Ford told reporters at Newark International Airport that he "approved the concept" of the commercials, which Mr. Reagan denounced yesterday.

The television and radio ads refer to Mr. Reagan's statement last week in response to a question, that seemed to indicate he would consider the use of American troops as a peace-keeping force during a transition to majority black rule in white-dominated Rhodesia.

"Whether you'd have to go in with occupation forces, I don't know," Mr. Reagan said last Wednesday.

The next day he said he did not advocate the use of United States troops and was only replying hypothetically to a question about the possibility.

But the Ford campaign commercials point out, both Mr. Reagan's initial statement and his subsequent explanation and declare, "When you vote Tuesday, remember Governor Ronald Reagan couldn't start the war. President Ronald Reagan could."

Mr. Ford, asked about the commercial today, said he approved the concept because he personally wanted my record known, that I would not under any circumstances commit U.S. military personnel, U.S. troops to Rhodesia or southern Africa.

When he arrived in Cleveland, Mr. Ford was asked if he would head Mr. Reagan's demand that the commercials be withdrawn. He said that was a matter for his campaign leaders to decide, but added "I speak the facts, I think American people ought to know them."

Campaigning in Ohio to identify to dismiss the staff members responsible for the end television spots.

"If Mr. Ford stands by commercials and does not charge the person responsible, then he endorses them," Mr. Ford said.

"If he endorses them, I think it is justly dishonest. I'm terribly sorry to hear the President endorses them."

Brown's 16-Month Record Shows Perplexing Array of Ambition and Accomplishment

By JON NORDHEIMER
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, June 4—The thing about Jerry is that he is a blend of contradictions," explains a man close to Edmund G. Brown Jr., the 38-year-old Governor of California and late-blooming Democratic Presidential candidate. "He is part radical and part conservative, part priest and part politician."

Another man, a liberal bureaucrat who has fallen from favor in the Brown administration, also sees contradictions in the former Jesuit seminarian. But in his view the contradictions have not smoothly meshed. Mr. Brown's leadership, he says, has been "government by spasm."

The record of Mr. Brown's 16-month tenure as Governor has come under increasing scrutiny since he jumped into national politics.

Using conventional standards, his critics say that Governor Brown has failed to prepare substantive programs to match his rhetoric, that he is dismantling programs without implementing any of the alternatives that he says he is contemplating, and that he is sometimes evasive, perhaps even deceptive, on controversial issues.

Still Assessing

Mr. Brown rejects the criticism and counters that his administration is still assessing programs, trying to identify those that work and those that do not. That task must be completed, he says, before government can be redirected and made more effective.

There are tangible accomplishments of the Brown administration, specific acts that make up a list that the Governor's office now circulates after months of reluctance to assess itself.

But the record is perplexing, not subject to standard interpretations, largely because Mr. Brown has established himself as an unconventional leader who rejects old notions about government's role in society.

Government, he has said from time to time, must lower its expectations in an age when not only government is limited in its responses, but the planet itself is losing resources capable of maintaining the high consumption of Americans.

In a complex state where the Legislature alone turns out 10,000 separate bills in one year, the Brown administration asks not to be measured by a stack of paper. The record that he prefers to cite is the tone of his office, and a mood that is slowly emerging here that bears watching if the nation is to cast off some of its most vexatious and debilitating problems.

First, the Brown administration has demonstrated its commitment to bringing into government women and members of minorities that in the past have been denied access in meaningful ways.

Of the roughly 750 appointments Mr. Brown has made so far, 45 percent have been women, blacks, Mexican-American icans or American Indians. These have not been window-dressing jobs. The appointees have been placed in some of the most powerful, decision-making positions in the administration, and judgeships on a scale that is remarkable.

Forty-four percent of his first 130 appointments to the state bench were women (15), blacks (17), Mexican-Americans (13), Asians (5) and American-Indians (2).

In an unstated premise, the administration has recognized that these changes cannot be carried out if members of the white middle-class majority become convinced that this progress is being achieved at their expense.

The administration, therefore, has been committed to tight budgets and a rejection of social action programs that it believes are more illusory than effective.

Projections that the state will end the next fiscal year with an expected surplus of $883 million has given rise to more calls for the Governor to loosen up on the purse strings, but so far he has indicated that the surplus will be preserved to safeguard against downturns in the economy that may adversely affect future revenues.

This policy has touched off some of the harshest assessments of the administration. Despite his high popularity in the state — polls have shown that more than 80 percent of the public rate his performance as either "good" or "fair" — the Governor has come under increasing attack by liberals in and out of government, conservatives, educators, reformers and other social activists.

They have assailed, mostly in private, his conservative fiscal policies, and have charged that dilatory executive practices are damaging existing programs, depriving needy people and activities of assistance, and that the slowdown he introduced to government has now been brought to a standstill by a fling at the Presidency.

Delegates Authority

A backlog of appointments to important agencies and commissions, which the Governor has insisted on personally screening, was a serious problem before he announced his candidacy in March. Campaigning full time has forced him to delegate more authority in some areas of decision making, but it has provided fresh ammunition to those who charge that his intensely personal style of governing, combined with a "lean" $11.6 billion proposed budget, have produced more neglect than solutions.

The heart of Mr. Brown's approach to the job is to scrutinize an area of concern, challenge its assumptions and determine if a solution is possible — or even necessary.

"I think there are a lot of things going on in this administration that over time will have an impact," he said the other day at a break in campaigning in Los Angeles. "At the same time, I believe there should be some limitations on the expansion of government. I think one of the most important things we can do in government is to avoid doing something stupid."

There is a methodology in his scrutiny of government that offends some advocacy groups, he said, but it is the way he prefers to function, and the only way he believes he can develop alternatives to programs that he feels cost immense sums to operate but achieve little.

"There's a timing to what I do and it's important to understand it to understand me," he once remarked. "The time you do things is important. I think the yeast has to rise before you act."

His disregard for the pomp and circumstance of office has endeared the bachelor Governor to many Californians, who in the post-Watergate spirit applauded an egalitarian leader who spurns a luxurious new mansion, limousines, private aircraft and the other regalia that tend to insulate many high level political positions. His credibility is reinforced by his way of living, which sets him apart from other leaders who seem to ask the nation to make sacrifices without reducing their own world of comfort.

He is also viewed by the public as thoroughly honest. Under no pressure to do so he recently made public details of his 1975 tax returns that showed he paid nearly one-third of his $80,000 income in taxes, not bothering to deduct charitable donations for which he qualified.

But Brown the Philosopher is sometimes inconsistent with Brown the Politician, who can be evasive on issues, perhaps even deceptive. He refused, for instance, to take a public stand on Proposition 13 on next Tuesday's primary ballot, the vote on impeding the construction of nuclear power plants. As pressure mounted, he acted in a way that is expected to bring support for the measure by signing for the measure three bills that imposed strict controls on nuclear energy development that were less rigid than the Proposition 13 guidelines.

Similarly, in the area of conservation he has continually spoken about the critical need for environmental safeguards, but on specific issues he has been an elusive mercurial figure whom conservationists have said is more likely to come down on the side of economic development over the protection of natural resources.

"Behind the symbols there is nothing, absolutely nothing except a totally cold fish," who represents the narrowest interest of all, his own political career," asserted Sidney Wolinsky, director of Public Advocates, a public interest law firm in San Francisco, in one of the harshest indictments of Mr. Brown.

That view is challenged by a record, however narrow, that lists accomplishments of substance. Some highlights follow:

FARM LABOR—In a legislative stroke that for the first time gave concrete evidence of Mr. Brown's powers of persuasion, he broke the deadlock that had fueled labor strife in the state's multibillion-dollar farm industry. He put through legislation that provided for state-supervised secret ballot union elections among farm workers and created the Agricultural Farm Labor Relations Board. However, when the motion ran out this year, conservative legislators representing the growers blocked additional appropriations and brought the process to a halt.

TAX LAW—Mr. Brown made good on a campaign promise and worked with the Legislature to revise tax provisions that favored oil companies, banks and insurance companies.

REDLINING—He introduced legislation to prevent real estate mortgage lenders from arbitrarily rejecting loans on property in marginal inner-city neighborhoods.

POVERTY—He recommended that the appropriation for the state's economic opportunity program be increased by 50 percent, tripled the state nutritional program from $15 million to $45 million and developed a civilian conservation corps to utilize unemployed inner-city youths.

ENVIRONMENT—He used state powers to fine automobile makers more than $4 million, besides forcing the recall of 35,000 cars that did not meet tough air pollution standards, and won passage of a $75 million bill to establish parks in major cities.

EDUCATION—He proposed a 50 percent budget increase in higher education grants for minority and poor students, and a 50 percent rise in an early childhood education program.

Critics offer a far longer list of money not provided and programs not enacted in all these areas and more, citing unfulfilled promises to deal with prison reform, unemployment, consumer protection, nursing homes and health delivery care.

The Governor's managerial style does contain elements of "benign neglect" that he acknowledges on the basis that government, particularly state government, is limited in its responses despite an attitude prevalent in some quarters that all were howls of protest.

Instead, the Governor utilized $10 million in extra funds for the development of alternatives to present child care centers. He did this when he covered that only 56,000 children were being cared for in existing centers at an annual cost of nearly $3,000 a child, cost he considered outrageous.

So instead of adding money to a system that is sufficient, an aide said, Brown elected to devise costly ways of expanding program in the way that involves more children and perhaps a wider range of services.

The new Presidential ambitions of Mr. Brown have the alarm of those who do trust his rhetoric or his interest in furthering the well of others. Even those who admire the man greatly worry if he can again refocus concentration on state affairs after being bitten by the Presidential bug.

But campaigning away from Sacramento has had one positive effect: in the view of most everyone, it has for the Governor to delegate liberally in a way he had been reluctant to do in the past.

Even while he is away from the domed Capitol, however, the administration carries in the enigmatic style that many find refreshing.

It was announced last month that the state would provide $25,000 to put his "small beautiful" philosophy to work. The money will be used to create an Office of Appropriate Technology that will have mission to develop ways to guide California through approaching era of diminished resources.

least muted, with fresh visions of money. The high employment rate in California, for example, is not responsible for anything that can be done at the state level, he has said. "I don't think it is justly dishonest. I'm terribly sorry to hear the President endorses them."

When you appoint a year-old Mexican-American woman to be head of the parole for the women's prison, that's never done," the Governor said in an interview. "When you appoint a woman to be head of what is probably the largest transportation agency in the United States, that's going to have impact and reach down to our offices."

Care Care Program

Another example of the willingness to perpetuate rent standards and programs without careful examination of their effectiveness occurred when Mr. Brown refused to expand spending for the state's child care centers. He did this when he covered that only 56,000 children were being cared for in existing centers at an annual cost of nearly $3,000 a child, cost he considered outrageous.

So instead of adding money to a system that is sufficient, an aide said, Brown elected to devise costly ways of expanding program in the way that involves more children and perhaps a wider range of services.

In Cleveland's 5th Ward, Voters Display a Sour and Testy Mood Over Primary

By WILLIAM E. STEVENS
Special to The New York Times

CLEVELAND, June 3—The rain beat down steadily and a haze of spring fog rolled in off Lake Erie one day this week, hiding the tall spires of the Terminal Tower, Cleveland's downtown landmark near the northern fringe of the city's Fifth Ward, and masking the hearts and lungs of the steel mills on the industrial flats that hug the ward's southern flank.

The mist smacked through the ward itself, casting a shroud over the small factories and homes, the Ukrainian-American Club and the Rocky Marciano Gym, St. Rocco's Church and Bonnie and Clyde's country-and-western bar, the Iglesia de Dios, the Polish Legion of American Veterans Club, and all the other symbols of the Fifth Ward's jumble of ethnic strains.

In all, the day was a perfect reflection of the gray-to-black mood of the Fifth Ward's voters the week before the Ohio Democratic primary—the most important of the primary season's last major tests for former Gov.

Jimmy Carter of Georgia and Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona.

The ward's voters seem united in nothing so much as splendid, suspicious and perverse testiness. The sourness about things political is everywhere. And it is even more pervasive and virulent than when soundings of opinion began last February in this industrial enclave of 22,000 blue-collar workers who have voted Democratic as long as people can remember—even in the Nixon tide of 1972.

Dangers for Carter

That mood is the central fact of political life, not only in the Fifth Ward, but also in 1976 Presidential politics generally. It may have everything to do with the outcome of next Tuesday's primary, both here and in the rest of northern Ohio.

Such ground is where the Ohio Democratic primary is being fought out. The result will determine, in large part, whether Mr. Carter gets the final batch of delegates he needs to assure himself of the nomination. For Mr. Udall's part, he has been forced, quite simply, to make his last stand here.

Mr. Carter appears to be ahead in the Fifth Ward, but dangers lurk for him here, and the voters' mood could prove treacherous.

Inside the 14th Street Coin

Laundry, out of the rain and amid the clean, sweet smell of newly washed clothes, Mrs. Burroughs discussed political matters as she folded T-shirts and towels.

She works at Kean's Beauty Shop, near the center of the Fifth Ward. There, she says, people talk politics "all the time."

"What do they say?" "Everybody's crook," she replied. "You can't really blame them. You lose your faith in these guys, and this guy Hays [Representative Wayne L. Hays of Ohio, who is embroiled in a sex scandal] isn't helping matters at all."

Mr. Carter's strategy a year has been to play to the loss of faith expressed by Mrs. Burroughs. To him it has been the war's super-charge, transcending more traditional issues such as economics.

Mrs. Burroughs said Mr. Carter would get her vote on Tuesday because he "seems to be O.K." in comparison with politicians generally. She also said that Mr. Carter "knows what he's doing," and that, unlike some of his challengers, "he's been in there from the start."

A Different Story

But across the ward at Bonnie and Clyde's, Tom Perry, a 41-year-old former West Virginian who helps build fork lift trucks, tells a different story.

Most "hillbillies," as they call themselves, and Ohio has hundreds of thousands of them—are expected to vote for Mr. Carter. But to Mr. Perry, who is "raised up as a Democrat," labor-union variety, and is a former supporter of Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama, Jimmy Carter is "just another millionaire"—a member of the establishment that the Georgian peanut farmer has made his target.

So Mr. Perry says he intends to vote for Mr. Udall because he wants to "block Carter." That suggests part of the ironic price Mr. Carter has had to pay for his success: He is now perceived by many voters as one of "them," a privileged politician, one of the powerful who is prospering at the people's expense.

He's Not Impressed

"Course, if I was a politician, I'd probably be crooked myself," said a worker at the Reliable Spring and Wire Forms Company in the Fifth Ward. Apparently, he is not impressed by Mr. Carter's optimistic assertion that all would be well if the country had "a government as good as its people." Nor is he impressed with Mr. Carter himself.

"There is no man for me right now," he said, adding that he would not vote next week.

Over and over, the refrain is heard: "I don't like any of em." With one emerging exception. "It's too bad that Jerry Brown couldn't be better known," said Marge Haddad, a quality-control technician at Reliable Spring. "I'd vote for him if he were on the ballot."

A few others, perhaps taking to the "new outsider," say the same. But Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California is not on the ballot here. Nor, in this 20th Congressional District, is Senator Frank Church of Idaho, Mr. Carter's other major opponent in Ohio.

Mr. Church is, however, on the statewide-at-large ballot, and Fifth Ward voters will have an opportunity to vote for him in that phase of the primary. How well he will do in the ward is difficult to gauge, given the late-blooming nature of his campaign. Any votes for him, however, are likely to help Mr. Carter and hurt Mr. Udall.

Mrs. Haddad said she would vote for Mr. Carter. "What choice do you have?" she asked.

Ward Five appeared to have swung to Mr. Carter a month ago, shortly after his pivotal victory in the Pennsylvania primary. In part, the Carter momentum seemed to have caused the swing. Partly, it was the perception that he was a winner, and many Ward Five voters, solidly Democratic and liberal in many ways—despite their onetime affection for Governor Wallace—want a victory over the Republicans in November.

But few voters a month ago could provide clear, positive reasons to vote for Mr. Carter. His support seemed lukewarm, of a piece with the "softness" of the Carter vote elsewhere, vulnerable to the erosion that some polls suggest has amounted in other states to 5 to 10 percent of the vote.

Indeed, there is some evidence of Carter slippage in Ward Five. One example: A month ago, three women at a common workbench at Reliable Spring all said they favored Mr. Carter. This week, two said they did not plan to vote, and the other said she was undecided.

Joe Mazzeo, the Democratic ward leader who has been for Mr. Carter since mid-February, insists that Mr. Carter will still carry the ward. But he has had little chance to work for Mr. Carter, he says, because his efforts are concentrated on electing his cousin, Michael Cimaco, to Congress.

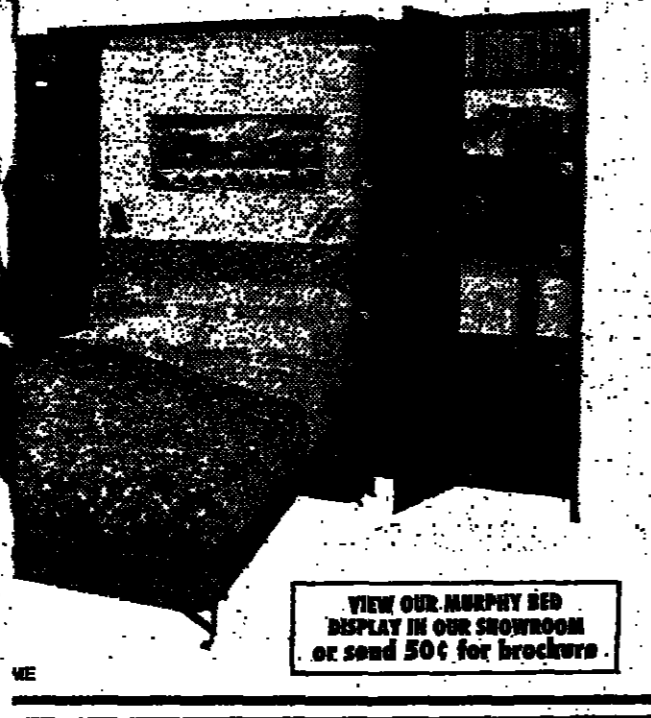

Meanwhile, Udall workers are reported to be waging an energetic campaign in the ward. One of them, a representative of the United Automobile Workers, reports that more than half the people he talks to say they will vote for Mr. Udall. "Whether they really will remains to be seen," the representative said.

Wallace Is at the End of a Long Trail in 4th Quest for Presidency

what he called "the exotic noisemakers of the New Left" and "the pointy-headed bureaucrats" of Washington.

On Friday, the Governor flew to San Francisco, where he was greeted by a lanky man wearing a red, white and blue Wallace boater and a woman with a blood beehive bouffant and a sequined "Wallace for President" sash. It was a moment from the tumultuous past, almost the sole genuine Wallace moment of the trip.

Only three or four other supporters showed up, and the Governor did not leave the San Francisco airport. He rambloned a bit with newsmen about how he filled the cavernous Cow Palace in an earlier campaign, speculated that "no one" would be going to the July convention with a majority of delegates, then returned to Los Angeles and the seclusion of his hotel room.

Arriving in Los Angeles, Mr. Wallace appeared tired.

Had he or any of his people been in contact with Mr. Carter, whom he has said he could support?
"No," he shot back.
He blamed "a public misconception" about his health for his political demise. Then, repeating what has become a Wallace line in 1976, he said almost pleadingly: "The only thing wrong with me is I can't walk."
Mr. Wallace was paralyzed below the waist in an assassination attempt in Laurel, Md., during his 1972 Presidential bid. He said that the results of his four Presidential campaigns because "everybody is now saying what I started out saying back in 1964."

see," he said.
Yesterday, Mr. Wallace journeyed to suburban Pomona for an appearance at a gospel rally, his last appearance as a Presidential candidate before a mass audience not taking part in a political convention. There was none of the old fire in his voice, none of the old excitement in the crowd as he spoke of "exotic noisemakers" for the first time on his California tour. In the end, he dropped political, turned to prayer and pleaded for Americans to start a "spiritual revolution" in this bicentennial year.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED CHANGES IN TELEPHONE RATE SCHEDULES

Notice is hereby given that the following tariff amendments providing for the introduction of the new COM KEY 416 Service have been filed with the Public Service Commission to be effective June 30, 1976.

DESCRIPTION OF SERVICE
The COM KEY 416 Service is a key telephone system with a capacity of 4 lines, 16 telephone instruments and 2 intercommunication paths. All instruments are multi-button telephones, in many with a choice of 9 decorative color facelplates, each equipped to pick up all the lines terminating in the system. The lines appear in the same sequence on each station. Two types of telephone sets, Common Equipment Stations and Basic Stations are used. All stations are equipped to pick up all the lines terminating in the system. Each Common Equipment Station also contains the control circuitry for the system features and for a maximum of 2 central office lines, one intercommunication path and 7 Basic Stations. The use of two Common Equipment Stations provided the alternate system capacity.

The basic features of the service are pick-up, wink hold illumination, multiple conferencing, button retraction, flexible ringing, recall, direct station selection on intercommunication paths, tone ringing, one-way voice signaling on intercommunication paths and built-in loudspeaker. Optional features, as described in the tariff, also are available at additional charges.

RATE STRUCTURE
COM KEY 416 Service is offered under three rate options, designated Options 1, 2 and 3. Under Option 1, the service is offered on the basis of standard monthly rates and installation charges, which are subject to change. Under Options 2 and 3, the monthly rates for the service and facilities consist of two parts, "A" and "B." The subscriber has the option of selecting "A" rate payment periods of 24, 50 or 96 months. The selected "A" rates are guaranteed against Company-initiated changes. The "B" part of the monthly rates apply, subject to change, from the date of installation. Under Option 2, the subscriber elects to pay an installation charge and under Option 3, the subscriber pays no separate installation charge, but the monthly rates for Option 3 service are higher than the monthly rates for Option 2 service. Termination charges specified in the tariff apply to the service and facilities furnished under Options 2 and 3. As an alternative to paying the "A" portion of the charge over the selected payment period, the subscriber may elect to make a one-time payment.

RATES AND CHARGES
The rates and charges are set forth in tariffs which are available for inspection at any office of the Telephone Company where business is transacted in person. The location of these offices can be found in the first pages of telephone directories.

Tariffs are also available at the offices of the Public Service Commission. A list of the rates and charges will also be furnished to any person who requests it by writing to the following address:

Text of Findings on C.I.A.

WASHINGTON, June 6—Following is the text of the conclusions of the final report of the Senate Intelligence Committee on the activities of the Central Intelligence Agency. In the text, D.C.I. is the Director of Central Intelligence, D.D.I. is the Directorate for Intelligence, D.D.O. is the Directorate for Operations and N.S.C. is the National Security Council.

The C.I.A. was conceived and established to provide high-quality intelligence to senior policymakers. Since 1947 the agency—its structure, its place within the Government and its function—has undergone dramatic change and expansion. Sharing characteristics common to most large, complex organizations, the C.I.A. has responded to rather than anticipated the forces of change; it has accumulated functions rather than redefining them; its internal patterns were established early and have solidified; success has come to those who have made visible contributions in high-priority areas. These general characteristics have affected the specifics of the agency's development.

The notion that the C.I.A. could serve as a coordinating body for departmental intelligence activities and that the D.C.I. could orchestrate the process did not take into account the inherent institutional obstacles posed by the departments. From the outset no department was willing to provide a centralized intelligence function to the C.I.A. Each insisted on the maintenance of its independent capabilities to support its policy role. With budgetary and management authority vested in the departments, the agency was left powerless in the execution of interdepartmental coordination. Even in the area of coordinated national intelligence estimates the departments did not readily provide the agency with the data required.

It was not until John McCone's term as D.C.I. that the agency aggressively sought to assert its position as a coordinating body. That effort demonstrated the complex factors that determined the relative success of community management. One of the principal influences was the support accorded the D.C.I. by the President and the cooperation of the Secretary of Defense. In a situation where the D.C.I. commanded no resources or outright authority, the position of these two individuals was crucial. While Kennedy and McNamara provided McCone with consistent backing in a variety of areas, Nixon and Laird failed to provide Helms with enough support to give him the necessary bureaucratic leverage.

Lack of Coordination

It is clear that the D.C.I.'s own priorities, derived from their backgrounds and interests, influenced the relative success of the agency's role in interdepartmental coordination. Given the limitations on the D.C.I.'s authority, only by making community activities a first-order concern and by pursuing the problem assertively could a D.C.I. begin to make a difference in effecting better management. During Allen Dulles' term interagency coordination went neglected, and the results were expansion of competing capabilities among the departments. For McCone, community intelligence activities were clearly a priority, and his definition of the D.C.I.'s role contributed to whatever advances were made. Helms' fundamental interests and inclinations lay within the agency, and he did not push his mandate to its possible limits.

The D.C.I.'s basic problems have been competing claims on his time and attention and the lack of real authority for the execution of the central intelligence function. As presently defined, the D.C.I.'s job is burdensome in the extreme. He is to serve the roles of chief intelligence adviser to the President, manager of community intelligence activities, and senior executive in the C.I.A. History has demonstrated that the job of the D.C.I. as community manager and as head of the C.I.A. are competing, not complementary roles. In terms of both the demands imposed by each function and the expertise required to fulfill the responsibilities, the two roles differ considerably. In the future separating the functions with precise definitions of authority and responsibilities may prove a plausible alternative.

Although the agency was established primarily for the purpose of providing intelligence analysis to senior policymakers within three years clandestine operations became and continued to be the agency's pre-eminent activity. The single most important factor in the transformation was policymakers' perception of the Soviet Union as a worldwide threat to United States security. The agency's large-scale clandestine activities have mirrored American foreign policy priorities. With political operations in Europe in the 1950's, paramilitary operations in Korea, Third World activities, Cuba, Southeast Asia and currently narcotics control, the C.I.A.'s major programs paralleled the international concerns of the United States.

In theory the D.D.O.'s clandestine collection function should have contributed to the D.D.I.'s analytic capacity. However, D.D.O. concerns about maintaining the security of its operations and D.D.I. concerns about measuring the reliability of its sources restricted interchange between the two directorates. Fundamentally, this has deprived the D.D.I. of a major source of information. Although D.D.I.-D.D.O. contact has increased during the last five years, it remains limited.

Incentive System Criticized

Internal incentives contributed to the expansion in covert action. Within the agency D.D.O. careers have traditionally been rewarded more quickly for the visible accomplishments of covert action than for the long term development of agents required for clandestine collection. Clandestine activities will remain an element of United States foreign policy, and policymakers will directly affect the level of operations. The prominence of the Clandestine Service within the agency may moderate as money for and high-level executive interest in covert actions diminish. However, D.D.O. incentives which emphasize operations over collection and which create an internal demand for projects will continue to foster covert action unless an internal conversion process forces a change.

In the past the orientation of D.C.I.s such as Dulles and Helms also contributed to the agency's emphasis on clandestine activities. It is no coincidence that of those D.C.I.s who have been Agency careerists, all have come from the Clandestine Service. Except for James Schlesinger's brief appointment, the agency has never been directed by a trained analyst. The qualities demanded of individuals in the D.D.O.—essentially management of people—serves as the basis for bureaucratic skills in the organization. As a result, the agency's leadership has been dominated by D.D.O. careerists.

Clandestine collection and covert action have had their successes, i.e., individual activities have attained their stated objectives. What the relative contribution of clandestine activities has been—the extent to which they have contributed to or detracted from the implementation of United States foreign policy and whether the results have been worth the risk—cannot be evaluated without wide access to records on covert operations, access the committee did not have.

Organizational arrangements within the agency and the decision-making structure outside the agency have permitted the extremes in C.I.A. activity. The ethos of secrecy which pervaded the D.D.O. had the effect of setting the directorate apart within the agency and allowed the Clandestine Service a measure of autonomy not accorded other directorates. More importantly, the compartmentation principle allowed units of the D.D.O. freedom in defining operations. In many cases the burden of responsibility fell on individual judgments—a situation in which lapses and deviations are inevitable. Previous excesses of drug testing, assassination planning and domestic activities were supported by an internal structure that permitted individuals to conduct operations without the consistent necessity or expectation of justifying or revealing their activities.

Blurred Accountability

Ultimately, much of the responsibility for the scale of covert action and for whatever abuses occurred must fall to senior policymakers. The complex arrangement at the N.S.C. level created an environment of blurred accountability which allowed consideration of actions without the constraints of individual responsibility. Historically the ambiguity and imprecision derived from the initial expectation that covert operations would be limited and therefore could be managed by a small, informal group. Such was the intention in 1948. By 1951 with the impetus of the Korean war, covert action had become a fixed element in the U.S. foreign policy repertoire. The frequency of covert action forced the development of more formalized decision-making arrangements. Yet structural changes did not alter ambiguous procedures. In the late 1950's the relationship between Secretary of State John Foster Dulles and Allen Dulles allowed informal agreements and personal understandings to prevail over explicit and precise decisions. In addition, as the scale of covert activity expanded, policymakers found it useful to maintain ambiguity of the decision-making process to insure secrecy and to allow "plausible deniability" of covert operations.

No one in the executive—least of all the President—was required to formally sign off on a decision to implement a covert action program. The D.C.I. was responsible for the execution of a project but not for taking the decision to implement it. Within the N.S.C. a group of individuals held joint responsibility for defining policy objectives, but they did not attempt to establish criteria placing moral and constitutional limits on activities undertaken to achieve the objectives. Congress has functioned under similar conditions. Within the Congress a handful of committee members passed on the agency's budget. Some members were informed of most of the C.I.A.'s major activities; others preferred not to be informed. The result was twenty-nine years of acquiescence.

At each level of scrutiny in the National Security Council and in the Congress a small group of individuals controlled the approval process. The restricted number of individuals involved as well as the assumption that their actions would not be subject to outside scrutiny contributed to the scale of covert action and to the development of questionable practices.

Independent Development

The D.D.O. and the D.D.I. evolved, serving different policy needs. Essentially, the two directorates have functioned as separate organizations. They maintain totally independent career tracks and once recruited into one, individuals are rarely posted to the other.

In theory the D.D.O.'s clandestine collection function should have contributed to the D.D.I.'s analytic capacity. However, D.D.O. concerns about maintaining the security of its operations and D.D.I. concerns about measuring the reliability of its sources restricted interchange between the two directorates. Fundamentally, this has deprived the D.D.I. of a major source of information. Although D.D.I.-D.D.O. contact has increased during the last five years, it remains limited.

political action program would affect judgments about the results of a forthcoming election; information provided by a foreign government official would be invaluable in assessing the motives, policies, and dynamics of that government; information on a C.I.A.-sponsored propaganda campaign might alter analyses of the press or public opinion in that country. Essentially, the potential quality of the finished intelligence product suffers.

Duplication of a Problem

The agency was created in part to rectify the problem of duplication among the departmental intelligence services. Rather than minimizing the problem the agency has contributed to it by becoming yet another source of intelligence production. Growth in the range of American foreign policy interests and the D.D.I.'s response to additional requirements have resulted in an increased scale of collection and analysis. Today, the C.I.A.'s intelligence products include current intelligence in such diverse areas as science, economics, politics, strategic affairs and technology; quick response to specific requests from government agencies and officials; basic or long-term research; and national intelligence estimates. With the exception of national intelligence estimates other intelligence organizations engage in overlapping intelligence analysis.

Rather than fulfilling the limited mission in intelligence analysis and coordination for which it was created, the agency became a producer of finished intelligence and consistently expanded its areas of responsibility. In political and strategic intelligence the inadequacy of analysis by the State Department and by the military services allowed the agency to lay claim to the two areas. As the need for specialized research in other subjects developed, the D.D.I. responded—as the only potential source for objective national intelligence. Over time the D.D.I. has addressed itself to a full range of consumers in the broadest number of subject areas. Yet the extent to which the analysis satisfied policymakers' needs and was an integral part of the policy process has been limited.

The size of the D.D.I. and the administrative process involved in the production of finished intelligence—a process which involves numerous stages of drafting and review by large numbers of individuals—precluded close association between policymakers and analysts, between the intelligence product and policy informed by intelligence analysis. Even the national intelligence estimates were relegated to briefing papers for second and third level officials rather than the principal intelligence source for senior policymakers that they were intended to be. Recent efforts to improve the interaction include creating the N.I.O. system and assigning two full-time analysts on location at the Treasury Department. Yet these changes cannot compensate for the nature of the intelligence production system itself, which employs hundreds of analysts, most of whom have little sustained contact with their consumers.

Reciprocal Relationship

At the Presidential level the D.C.I.'s position is essential to the utilization of intelligence. The D.C.I. must be constantly informed, must press for access, must vigorously sell his product and must anticipate future demands. Those D.C.I.s who have been most successful in this dimension have been those whose primary identification was not with the D.D.O.

Yet the relationship between intelligence analysis and policymaking is a reciprocal one. Senior policymakers must actively utilize the intelligence capabilities at their disposal. Presidents have looked to the agency more for covert operations than for intelligence analysis. While only the agency could perform covert operations, decision-making methods determined Presidential reliance on the C.I.A.'s intelligence capabilities. Preference for small staffs, individual advisers, the need for specialized information quickly—all of these factors circumscribed a President's channels of information, of which intelligence analysis may be a part. It was John F. Kennedy who largely determined John McCone's relative influence by defining the D.C.I.'s role and by including McCone in the policy process; it was Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon who limited the roles of Richard Helms and William Colby. Although in the abstract objectivity may be the most desirable quality in intelligence analysis, objective judgments are frequently not what senior officials want to hear about their policies. In most cases, Presidents are inclined to look to the judgments of individuals they know and trust. Whether or not a D.C.I. is included among them is the President's choice.

Over the past 30 years the United States has developed an institution and a corps of individuals who constitute the U.S. intelligence profession. The question remains as to how the institution and the individual will best be utilized.

An Authority on the History of the C.I.A.

Anne Karalekas

Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, June 6—Until last summer, Anne Karalekas's only acquaintance with the nether world of foreign intelligence services was her study, for her doctoral thesis, of records of British and American espionage efforts in Greece in World War II. Since then, by dint of what she describes as "80-hour weeks" and a special entry into the dead files and living memories of American spies and agents, she has become an authority on the history of the United States Central Intelligence Agency.
Miss Karalekas's assignment was to write the 30-year institutional history of postwar American intelligence operations for the Senate Select Committee to Study Governmental Operations With Respect to Intelligence Activities.
The tall, slender Boston native was chosen from a field of 15 candidates partly on the recommendation of her associates at Harvard and partly on the basis of her doctoral dissertation on American and British activities in wartime Greece.
"Anne was always interested in history," said her mother, Helen Karalekas, who works for the State Street Building Trust Company in Boston. "She always seemed to know what she wanted to do."
Lillian Lapidus, who taught Miss Karalekas ancient history at the Girls Latin School in Boston, recalled her as "one of the brightest, well-qualified students I ever had—she always wanted to know why."

Miss Karalekas was born Nov. 6, 1946, about 10 months before the Central Intelligence Group, the predecessor of the C.I.A., was founded. Her father, Chris, a second-generation Greek-American, was in the bakery business. She attended elementary schools in Boston and Florida.
No Greek was spoken in the Karalekas home, "which made it harder," she said, for her to absorb the language as a Greek school student did three times a week for five years. But she can converse in Greek and cook Greek dishes and occasionally wears Greek costume jewelry.
Thankful for "Standards" at Girls Latin, she was an honor student all four years, and she remains grateful to teachers such as Mrs. Lapidus, Elizabeth Condon and Edith Campbell, all retired, for their demanding standards.
On a merit scholarship, she attended Wheaton College "when it was still called a 'girls' school' rather than a 'women's college,' as today." After briefly considering a career in art history, Miss Karalekas concentrated on straight history and wrote her senior thesis on "the termination of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance in 1921" for Prof. Paul Helmreich.

She worked summer vacations from school as a choral assistant at the Boston Symphony, a receptionist at a law firm and a research assistant at a university.
Professor Helmreich encouraged her to go to graduate school and introduced her to Ernest R. May, a Harvard history professor who had been his teacher.
While working toward a master's degree, Miss Karalekas "took a year off" to work at Massachusetts General Hospital in administrative and supervisory capacities.
Her doctoral thesis stemmed from her being "interested in Greece and wanting to incorporate something from the war." During one summer, she researched recently released British diplomatic files at the Public Record Office in London. The thesis, "Britain, the United States and Greece—1942 to 1945," was completed in August, 1974, and her degree was granted three months later.
In the meantime Graham T. Allison, Professor of Politics at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government, asked Miss Karalekas to work on a series of projects on defense and arms-control policy.
He said that she had proven to be "bright and industrious" in managing a project on military operations in Indochina conflict and in writing a report on foreign policy for an independent commission headed by former Ambassador Robert D. Murphy.

When she left the Senate Intelligence Group looking for trained candidates for the C.I.A. history Professor Helmreich was the first one in a telephone about Miss Karalekas, "very quick, very clear, very intelligent." He said that she had studied "American politics" at Studied Sec...

young Harvard-trained historians.
It contains no shocking disclosures about individual aberrations or covert action debacles. But it does tell about rivalry in the American intelligence community, a lack of accountability to the executive and some peculiar priorities.
The Senate committee, which officially ended its work last month, has made public in recent weeks a series of reports on foreign and domestic intelligence abuses. One more report by the committee, on the assassination of President Kennedy, is to be made public about the end of June.
The report of a separate investigation by the House Select Committee on Intelligence also charged that the intelligence community had on occasions failed to provide significant intelligence to policymakers. But the supplemental report released today provides a far more concise account.

Considered More Thorough
Today's report is also the first complete history of the C.I.A. ever published for the public, although the agency has printed a history for its own use.
In addition, the agency worked more closely with the Senate committee on its report than it did with the House committee. This today's study is considered more thorough.
The report of the Senate committee has focused on areas of abuse and listed proposed reforms for intelligence agencies; this study attempts to examine the forces that led to the agency's shortcomings.
Miss Karalekas spent two months studying the agency's own histories, numbering 75 volumes, and eight months interviewing 60 present and former agency officials.
Her five-page conclusion says the agency "responded to a reality that anticipated the force of change" over the last 30 years and "accumulated functions rather than redefining them."

The principal target of American intelligence in March 1946, three years before the Russians exploded their first atomic weapon. The agency then had 1,816 employees. Five years later, under General Smith, the number was 3,338.
Miss Karalekas also reports that four years after the agency was established 24 Government departments and agencies were still "producing economic intelligence" in 1952. There were three military research groups in the C.I.A. alone, a situation that was not rectified until 1966.
The history attributes this continuing duplication of effort to the creation of the agency leaders to outstrip the military intelligence services and to gain greater access to the White House.
As a result, it concludes, there were "tension" within the agency and a proliferation of intelligence products unused by the officials they were intended for. One retired analyst is quoted as having said: "Our biggest problem was whether or not anybody would read our product." It was a complaint also frequently made by William E. Colby when he was director from 1973 to 1976.
The agency's covert actions began in 1948, a year after the establishment of the C.I.A. Miss Karalekas attributes their conception to George F. Kennan, then director of policy planning at the State Department.

She quotes Mr. Kennan as having said he was alarmed later over the massive covert operations undertaken on what he has regarded as a modest success.
In any case, she continues, American policymakers were appalled by the 1949 Communist coup in Czechoslovakia and Communist-inspired strikes in Western Europe and, within three years, the covert branch of the agency "simply skyrocketed." The history says that the Office of Planning and Coordination—the formal name for the "dirty tricks" branch—expanded from 302 members in 1949 to 6,000 in 1952, and from a budget of $4.7 million to $52 million.
Similarly, she reports, the number of overseas cover stations grew from seven to 47 in this period "without establishing firm guidelines for approval" of foreign undercover operations by officials in the executive branch.
Soon, she says, competition developed on the covert operations branch, where the pay was higher and the promotions were quicker than in other branches. Covert officers were encouraged to develop a maximum number of "projects," often without any supervision from the home office, much less from higher authorities.
Separation and Distortion
Virtually from the inception of the C.I.A., the intelligence collection and covert action operations were separated, and Miss Karalekas says this resulted in a "totally distorted" espionage relationship that has persisted to this day.
In 1962, clandestine operations accounted for 74 percent of the agency's budget, the bulk of this going for covert action. According to the study, clandestine services took a major share of funds until the late 1960's, when budgetary pressures and the easing of Cold War tensions gradually diminished the covert operations.
Miss Karalekas also attributes "excesses," such as search into poisons and plots to assassinate foreign leaders, to the separation of the two functions.

"Can you still afford commercial banks?"

—Joe DiMaggio

The Myth of High Interest

Commercial banks can only pay up to 5% a year on passbook savings—by law. (Some pay as little as 4 1/2%.)

The Bowery can pay 5 1/4% a year on passbook savings. And it does.

Think about the difference...it's your money.

The Myth of Free Checking

Free checking at most commercial banks requires a large balance in a savings or checking account. ($500 in some cases.)

Free checking at The Bowery has no strings—no minimum balance in a savings or checking account required.

Think about the difference...it's your money.

Bridge: Choice of Right Trump Suit Important in Bidding a Slam

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

The choice of the right trump suit for a slam contract can be a very delicate affair. There may be an advantage in selecting a four-four fit, or the solidity of the suit may be the vital factor.

Both these considerations came into play on the diagramed deal, reported by Philip Cowan of New Rochelle, from the recent final of the Westchester Double-Knockout Team Championship.

Remove North's club king and replace it with any lower club, and seven spades would be the most desirable contract, needing only a three-two trump break. The four-four fit proves to be profitable because clubs can be discarded on hearts after trumps are drawn, and the club seven is eventually ruffed in the North hand.

Best Contract Reached
 But with the club king in the North hand, there is no advantage in playing in spades. If that suit breaks three-two, there are 13 tricks available in spades, hearts or no-trump. Seven spades stands or falls on the trump split. Seven no-trump is a fraction better, and seven hearts is better still, as was demonstrated in practice.

The declarer was Bill Passell of White Plains, who won the event together with his wife, Marjorie, Andy Gabriovich of Stamford, Conn., and Mike Levinson and Alan Schwartz, both of Scarsdale. The bidding began with two artificial bids. One club showed a strong hand, and the one-spade response conventionally showed 9 to 11 high-card points, enough to guarantee a game. South was able to locate two kings in the North hand with Blackwood. Nevertheless, his final bid was something of a gamble. Passell showed expert technique in the play. He won the opening trump lead, drew trumps and played clubs, ruffing the third round in his hand. This left East with the burden of protecting the fourth round of clubs and the spades. After declarer cashed the diamond ace and another trump, the position was:

The Zoo as Ghetto

By ANATOLE BROYARD

LIVING TROPHIES. By Peter Batten, assisted by Deborah Stancil. 246 pages. Crowell, $9.95.

My first visit to the Central Park Zoo occurred when I was 7 years old. It was feeding time in the lion house and I remember thrilling to the roars of the hungry animals as they leaped up on the bars of their cages. This was before television, and wild animals had not yet become commonplace. As an adolescent, I returned alone to the zoo, hoping to repeat the experience. I was still impressed, partly through having read the entire Tarzan series, with large animals. The second visit was a failure. The lions, tigers, leopards and cheetahs lay silent and indifferent in their cages as their food was thrown in. What had happened? I wondered. Perhaps, I thought, these were the same animals I had seen 10 years earlier, and they had grown bored with zoo life.

"Living Trophies," by Peter Batten, offers some answers to my question. A former zoo director and designer, Mr. Batten spent four months, together with his research associate, Deborah Stancil, inspecting and photographing almost 200 zoos in the United States. To call his findings depressing would be putting it mildly. Most zoos, he says, suffer from insolvency, the incompetence of many of the people who work in them, the "hyper-competitiveness" of their directors, the inefficiency of the civil service to staff and maintain them properly and the ignorance or cruelty of a large proportion of the visiting public. Judging from his savage tone, Mr. Batten has seen enough atrocities to turn him into something of a wild animal himself.

List of Abuses

Here are some of the abuses he lists and sometimes documents: Many birds' wings are clipped so that they are easier to house; a male lion had been castrated, de-clawed, suffered his canine teeth to be ground away, and, as a final twist, had had his tongue amputated by a vandal; nonabrasive floors caused excessive hoof growth that crippled zebras and other hoofed animals; abrasive floors wore away the claws, then the flesh, of animals that are natural diggers; birds and animals accustomed to tropical climates were given unheated tin drums in which to sleep in places where the temperatures fell as low as 17 degrees; animals were often given too much or too little light and their sight was damaged; many animals sustained injuries from metal spikes that projected into their cages; alligators' eyes were gouged out by vandals; cherry bombs were thrown into cages; Coke bottles were thrown down hippos' throats; a baby elephant was given an overdose of drugs by "playful" young visitors; any number of animals have developed neuroses as a result of teasing, noise, lack of occupation and improper environments.

When drunks or exhibitionists invaded the cages of large animals, it was invariably the animal who was shot, and I have no doubt that Mr. Batten feels that this form of "justice" was arbitrary at best. Incompatible animals were often put in the same cage, with the result that some killed the others. In the case of chimpanzees, which of all animals are most like man in their behavior, three males developed a homosexual ménage à trois.

In "Living Trophies," the author objects to the image of the animal as a plaything with only the most minimal needs and intelligence. At a time when many psychotherapies are desperately reaching for the animal in man, he would seem to be justified in his indignation. The press releases and "educational" materials sent out by some zoos are described by Mr. Batten as "abominable snow jobs." He deplores the fact that zoo directors have tenure and are virtually impossible to remove, even when their incompetence has been dramatically demonstrated. Another thing that spurs his ire is the preference in zoos for "fashionable" or "exotic" animals like cheetahs and the downgrading of our own national species.

A Program of Reform

While the author is an angry man, he does offer a series of constructive suggestions. Animals, he says, should have a bill of rights too, and one that is enforced. He expects him to suggest, after criticizing their food and housing, that they be put on welfare as well. The zoo directors, according to the author, should undergo a complete course of professional training in several fields, including administration and animal care.

Mr. Batten feels that zoos should be funded by the Federal Government, that animals should be selectively, not randomly, bred and that birth control should be practiced to prevent growth beyond the zoo's capacity — especially since these surplus animals are sometimes sold to experimental laboratories, hunting organizations and other commercial exploiters of animals.

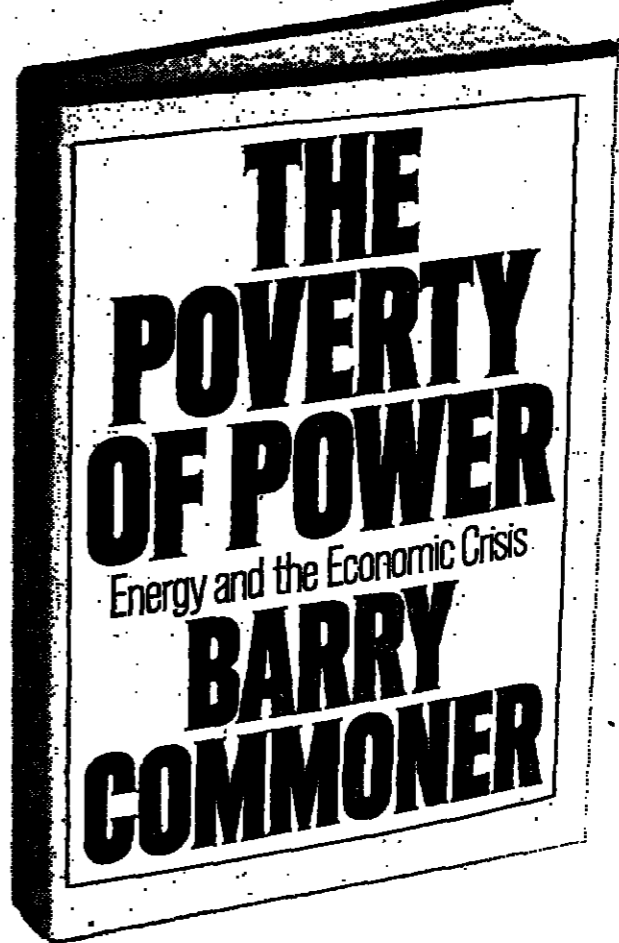

After admitting that humane and conservation organizations do a certain amount of good, the unappeasable Mr. Batten adds that with only one or two exceptions, their founders have become "insufferable hoers" who refuse to cooperate with other groups whose views differ in minor ways from their own. There are 305 aquariums, housing 130,000 specimens, now in the United States. After toy-ing with the notion of euthanasia for a large number of their suffering animals, the author grudgingly settles for a program of reform based on smaller zoos that would be capable of giving better care to their charges.

The apathetic, obese, neurotic creatures we see in so many zoos do not do justice, Mr. Batten says, to the majesty of creation. If he does succeed in cleaning up our zoos, I, for one, hope he will then turn his evangelist's zeal to that other apathetic, obese, neurotic species on this side of the bars.

It was a 30-megaton nuclear disaster. It happened in Siberia. In 1908!

It was history's biggest explosion: a blast that would have leveled Chicago or Los Angeles within minutes. In 1908, scientists attributed it to a "meteor"—and wondered why there was no crater. Not until Hiroshima could they correctly interpret eyewitness accounts of the black rain, the fire storm, the unmistakable, unforgettable mushroom cloud. Unbelievable as it seems, what happened in 1908 was an atomic explosion — an explosion probably fifteen hundred times greater than Hiroshima!

But what caused it has remained a mystery, though hundreds of eyewitnesses saw the cause — a visible, cylindrical craft which actually changed course to head for unpopulated wilderness.

Was that craft, a mysterious comet from outer space? Or was it, as the authors of THE FIRE CAME BY believe, an atomic ship piloted by intelligent beings, and vaporized in its own destruction?

The Kirkus Reviews call THE FIRE CAME BY "an engrossing true-life intergalactic detective story." Publishers Weekly says it "reads like a well-plotted suspense thriller." But THE FIRE CAME BY isn't fiction. The explosion was real. The authors' theory is backed up. The answer to the riddle, says Isaac Asimov in his Foreword, is up to you. "But read the book! I loved every page of it!"

Primary Climax

The first phase of the Presidential election process comes to its noisy end tomorrow, with climactic primaries in New Jersey, Ohio and California—all, three of them heavyweights in population, delegates and electoral impact. As the crucial primary day approaches, both President Ford and former Georgia Governor Carter have their parties' nominations almost within their grasp. If there are to be upsets now, they will have to be big ones, to permit the one Republican challenger or the half-dozen Democratic contenders to stay alive.

On the Republican side, President Ford received an unexpected boost from former Governor Reagan's latest verbal gool, the suggestion—however couched in the hypothetical—that there might be circumstances in which American troops should be sent to Rhodesia.

To longtime watchers of the Reagan campaign, this little episode fitted into an uncanny pattern of ill-timed blunders that have already cost the candidate dearly. Mr. Reagan's waverings about Social Security early in the campaign lost him essential support in New Hampshire and Florida. His unenthusiastic musings about the Tennessee Valley Authority did him no good among Tennessee and Kentucky Republicans.

Far-fetched though it may seem, the Ford forces believe that Mr. Reagan may now be tripping himself up in California. A loss in his home state would surely end his challenge for good. If Mr. Ford should make a strong showing in California—even short of victory—and go on to take Ohio and New Jersey as expected, the incumbent President would be in a firm position that no amount of pre-convention maneuvering is likely to demolish.

Among the Democrats, the siege is tightening around Mr. Carter from all sides; yet the front-runner would have to collapse in all three states to lose his ground.

California's Democrats allot their delegates proportionally to the popular vote—unlike the Republicans' winner-take-all rules. Thus, even though the late-starting Governor Brown can expect a majority on his own turf, Mr. Carter may pick up some convention votes. In Ohio the anti-Carter vote will be split between Congressman Udall and Senator Church.

It is New Jersey where the anti-Carter forces seem at their most desperate, fielding an uncommitted slate ready to go for either Governor Brown or Senator Humphrey—anyone, it would seem, except Jimmy Carter. Mr. Brown hopes to repeat his Rhode Island triumph of the incumbents, while Senator Humphrey persists in his campaign with such vigor as to mock his continuing claims of noncandidacy.

Those are the permutations for tomorrow. By Wednesday the preliminaries should be over and American voters could find themselves facing just two major candidates for the Presidency of the United States.

Nuclear Decision . . .

"Our representatives depend ultimately on decisions made in the village square. . . . To the village square we must carry the facts of atomic energy. From there must come America's voice."

So wrote Albert Einstein in 1946. Tomorrow in California one segment of the nation's village square will sound its voice on the wisdom and safety of relying upon nuclear energy to power America's future.

Conveying the facts of atomic energy to the public has turned out to be a less decisive process than Einstein envisaged, for mere "facts" in this case do not add up to answers. For months past, as the date of California's nuclear referendum approached, millions of dollars have been spent in publicity campaigns, by advocates and opponents of nuclear power alike, in the effort to persuade the electorate. But the effort has brought no clarity. Equally authoritative voices have divided on whether nuclear power plants are "safe" and economical. The public—not only in California—is confronted with an uncomfortable choice: which experts to believe?

California's so-called Proposition 13 would set stringent technical and political conditions for the construction of new nuclear power plants within the state, and phase down over years the operation of present plants unless they can meet safety assurances far more extensive than any yet required.

Nuclear advocates claim that passage of the initiative would effectively scotch all nuclear power development in California; the measure's sponsors argue that it would merely force the nuclear industry to prove its claims of safety and efficiency.

This is one case in which the campaign may prove more decisive than the election, for whichever way California's voters come down, the promise of nuclear power has grown tarnished; technologically and economically, the nuclear industry has been thrown on the defensive by a skeptical public.

The California Legislature passed three bills virtually on the eve of the referendum which would curtail nuclear development, though less rigidly than the popular initiative. Even if Proposition 13 is rejected, about a dozen other states are slated to have antinuclear measures on their ballots in November.

. . . and America's Voice

It may be tempting to argue—contrary to Einstein—that nuclear decisions are too technical and complex to be properly put before the public. Certainly some antinuclear campaigns have verged on the irresponsible in the use of far-fetched scare tactics. But a committee of the California Legislature dismissed this argument after hearing 120 expert witnesses, concluding:

"The issues are not solely resolvable through application of scientific expertise. The debate is more the result of differing views on human abilities, human fallibility and human behavior than anything else. The questions involved require value judgments, and the voter is no less equipped to make such judgments than the most brilliant Nobel Laureate."

Many voters are undoubtedly inclined to accept the projections of national energy needs and assurances of relative safety provided by the nuclear industry and its scientific supporters. Their decision on Election Day tomorrow will be easy.

But others have growing doubts. It is arguable that projected energy demand over the coming decades can be cut back without harming the growth of the national economy or the life style of its citizens. Further, the advances made in solar energy technology and the nuclear fusion process over the past couple of years may well provide far greater—and safer—promise for future decades than today's nuclear fission reactors.

Since the scientists and technologists cannot agree among themselves, it must be the village square that voices the judgments of relative values in the design of the nation's energy future.

Callous CUNY Impasse

The legislative package that is essential to provide for the future funding of the City University is endangered not by any substantive disagreement over its basic contents but by the legislators' reluctance to be associated with unpopular decisions in an election year.

No serious doubts remain that the die has been cast against free tuition. One serious obstacle to approval of the package is the politicians' reluctance to share the blame for ending a long-cherished tradition.

State Senator Warren Anderson, the leader of the Republican majority, exhibited irresponsibility and confused the issues with his astonishing statement that he did not have "anything to do with reopening CUNY." Mr. Anderson ignores the fact that Albany has a clear obligation to protect students' access to public higher education, regardless of whether they live in New York City or elsewhere in the state.

Mayor Beame had been less than helpful in refusing to join those who must publicly shoulder the burden of that painful decision, but in a statement last night he made it clear in tone and in substance that nothing now stands in the way of reopening the university except Albany's delaying action. Mr. Beame's statement should make it materially easier for the New York City delegation in Albany to end the charade that now delays the reopening of CUNY—for it is evident that there is not the slightest prospect of changing an outcome already firmly dictated by the budget.

It is unconscionable for the Legislature to keep Governor Carey's proposal for a $24 million advance to CUNY tied up in the embattled package. There is no longer any need for the original strategy of dangling that $24 million, desperately needed to meet the university's May and June obligations, before the Board of Higher Education in order to obtain action on tuition. The board has acted; and by now separating the rescue fund from the delayed package, the Legislature could quickly allow the university to be re-opened.

Not to do so is to show contempt for the rights of those young people whose academic work remains caught in the impasse and who should be preparing soon for summer studies or summer jobs. To hold these students hostage in the present maneuvering is an act of political callousness.

Adirondack Mischief

Governor Carey's sound legislative proposals for improving the workings of the Adirondack Park Agency necessarily involved the risk that they would be so amended by the Legislature that the end result would be harmful. That is why some of the agency's champions were doubtful about any tampering with the law. A serious attempt is indeed now being made to weaken the Governor's bills through amendments. But it is this effort that should be beaten back and not the legislation itself.

One of the two threatening proposals introduced in the Senate would cancel the agency's jurisdiction over the building of single-family dwellings in Resource Management areas, the most vulnerable in the Park. There would be no great loss if the agency were denied the right flatly to disapprove such applications—it does that now only in the rarest cases—but it should certainly have the right and duty to insist on standards and conditions that will keep such houses in harmony with the environment. That can only be a service to both the private owners and the general public.

Potentially more damaging is the scheme to limit the Governor's choice of agency board members to nominees picked by Local Government Review Boards, which have been generally hostile to the agency's work from the start. The whole point of this mischievous move is to start undoing the concept of the Adirondacks as a statewide interest. To assign Park residents an appropriate number of memberships on the agency board is reasonable and called for by the law as it stands. To allow the localities a hand in choosing an administrative board charged with overseeing the zoning and planning activities of those same localities is obviously to weaken its objectivity and significance. It would encourage an even narrower parochialism in the future.

The Governor's bills—which provide, among other improvements, for the substitution of effective civil penalties for the present ineffective criminal sanctions—are too essential to be lost by having them tied to changes that should compel him to veto the entire measure. If the proponents of these changes believe in them, they should submit them as separate bills, which could then be passed or, we would hope, defeated on the floor or at worst be individually rejected by the Governor.

M.A.C. Bonds: In Defense of Moody's Rating

To the Editor:
Moody's Investor Service is to be congratulated for its forthright stand in rating the bonds of the Municipal Assistance Corporation on their investment merits instead of by politicized arithmetic. It becomes Felix Rohatyn, M.A.C.'s chairman, and Simon Rifkind, M.A.C.'s chief counsel, to accuse Moody's of gross negligence and gross incompetence.

M.A.C. was, after all, conceived as a hybrid of the biggest municipal default of all time, even though this default was subsequently called a moratorium and received the blessing of the New York State Legislature.

It was, in fact, Mr. Rifkind who pleaded in favor of abrogating the sanctity of private contracts and of invalidating the time-honored and constitutionally guaranteed rights of bondholders in New York. Mr. Rifkind's very success in partially expropriating the many investors who had put their money and faith in the financial integrity of the city now presumably causes Moody's to fear that Messrs. Rifkind and Rohatyn may have another plan up their sleeves—this time directed against the M.A.C. bondholders.

Moody's correctly feels that the principal and interest payments on A-rated bonds should not have to depend on the good faith or good will of politicians, city administrators or self-appointed Robin Hoods. An A-rating implies no risk to either principal or interest under present or foreseeable conditions. Clearly such a value judgment cannot be applied to M.A.C. bonds, which are even now the subject of renegotiation attempts on the part of M.A.C. to reduce the rate of interest M.A.C. agreed to only last year.

Moody's has a fiduciary obligation to its clients who subscribe to its service to rate bonds according to its judgment and not to succumb to pressure of threats. The very thought that interested parties should try to put pressure on an impartial arbiter's decisions appears distasteful. M.A.C.'s much-publicized threat to sue Moody's is clearly an attempt to direct the public's attention away from the sorry state of New York's financial affairs. It is a surprising maneuver on the part of former Judge Rifkind and investment banker Rohatyn, who are attempting thereby to prolong the mirage they invented last year.

Since New York is not Russia, it is inconceivable that a court here would order a rating agency how to advise or a rating agency how to rate. If, on the other hand, an American court should so order, it would surely be a signal for all bondholders, M.A.C. or otherwise, to head for the lifeboats.

What Kissinger Said

To the Editor:
I refer to the article by Feuer which was published Op-Ed page on May 27.

The misuse of a quotation by Secretary Kissinger by Mr. Feuer seriously alters the import of Secretary said by the omission of the text.

The quotation is taken from an interview by Mr. Reston published in your newspaper on Oct. 13, 1975, was obviously a preface to an answer to a question, as text clearly shows:

"I think of myself as a historian, you have to be conscious of the fact that every civilization that ever existed has ultimately collapsed."

"History is a tale of effort, of aspirations that were realized, of wishes that were fulfilled, and then turned out to be different than one expected. So, as a historian, one has to live with a sense of the inevitability of tragedy, statesman, one has to act on the supposition that problems must be solved."

"Each generation lives in time even though ultimately perhaps they have all suffered a decline, is of no help to any one generation and the decline is usually traced a loss of creativity and insight and therefore avoidable."

"It is probably true that insofar as history is a tale of effort, of aspirations that were realized, of wishes that were fulfilled, and then turned out to be different than one expected, as I act, my motive force, of I am conscious, it is to try to do it."

The full quotation makes clear that the Secretary considers the decline of civilizations avoidable and that of the statesman to work to the best of his ability.

By taking the first sentence, Secretary's reply from its text, Mr. Feuer conveniently sets a preconceived notion and total leading commentary.

The assertion later in the text that the Secretary predicted a "monist" Western Europe in ten years is simply false. He has never said such a statement, direct or indirect. There is some irony in the fact he has in fact been widely attacked by the Times, among others, for a strong public position against Communist Party participation in European governments.

A Task for Juries

To the Editor:
There may be a simple solution to the problem of ordered busing to achieve balance in public schools. The is a law which will authorize to decide whether there has been racial discrimination.

Now, politicized Federal judges all busing decisions. The people interests are affected by busing decisions are not integrated into the slow-making process. There is a son for this. Every day juries decisions involving the life, liberty, property of black and white citizens. Surely juries can make decisions.

Rock of Freedom

To the Editor:
While America celebrates its year of precious independence the United Kingdom, the Rock Gibraltar might well be celebrating a bicentennial and a half to mark equally precious dependence of United Kingdom. The Americans erred links with the mother country to retain much of their heritage, whereas the Gibraltar strengthened theirs to preserve of that same heritage. The difficult approaches were dictated by territory—three square miles as contrasted to this vast country.

Gibraltar is a bastion of freedom. The Gibraltarian has developed a mistakable personality and d'être. This personality will refuse to be cast backward into colonialism, pushed forward into the pre-jaws of Franco's policy. The destiny of the Rock must remain firmly in the hands of its inhabitants, men whom—not unlike the Americans—made new lives in new territories, escaping greater evils elsewhere.

The choice of the people (confronted overwhelmingly by referendum) continue to live in peace and freedom under British auspices and in and brotherly relations with the misbegotten Franco answer were persecute the Gibraltarians, by the land frontier, prohibiting contact, cutting communications including in a campaign of petty tactics. Families once united on sides of the frontier have been apart. But nothing gives a greater cohesion and firmness of pose than unjustified persecutions, particularly so in the case of Gibraltarians, with their long history of sieges.

The new monarchy in Spain afford a welcome sign that fresh cepts and a more democratic were starting to govern Spanish tactics. The Gibraltarians are-love Spain in a deep sense, but the also lovers of freedom, justice a right to their destiny.

Let the Cattle Graze

To the Editor:
The Times recently carried an editorial entitled "The Tale of Two Committees." Although the editorial lacked specific information, it seemed to refer to Senate Bill S. 2555, called the "National Rangelands Policy Act."

Does the Times really believe that this bill will contribute to the "environmental integrity of the West"? Do you really believe that "cattle and sheep grazing on Bureau of Land Management land for a few months grossly hurt the general public? If you do, it may interest you to know that it costs about $60 per day to feed 400 to 500 cattle. That results in an unnecessary amount of $1,860 per month. Does not that increase in price hurt the public even more than grazing? I am sorry, but we ranchers and the general public cannot pay for that extra cost with "environmental integrity."

The Times further charged that B.L.M. land belongs "to all Americans and should be managed as such." Perhaps you do, not feel that most all Americans benefit from the sheep and cattle that graze the land. Perhaps you are vegetarians. If you are, come out West with your families. I will take you to some B.L.M. land so you can benefit from it and have a picnic while surrounded by miles of nothing but sagebrush and cheatgrass.

Of all the commemorative events of this year, I can think of none better than further to cripple the food suppliers of our nation.

Palestine: The Unavoidable Issue

To the Editor:
In your otherwise excellent editorial on "Israel's Dilemma" (May 11) you indicated that a "direct clash between Washington and Jerusalem" on the issue of settlements in the occupied territories "is bound to occur, whenever Israel and Jordan move into the negotiation process on the future of the West Bank."

Surely this reference to Jordan and the West Bank contained something of an oversight, especially in view of past Times editorials.

While Jordan may still have some role to play in bringing about a new Middle East status quo, today the Palestinian Arab factor is real and can no longer be linked solely with the future of Jordan. The national rights of the Palestinian Arab people are both internationally recognized and historically valid—more historically valid in fact than the right of Hashemite King Hussein to rule on the east bank of the Jordan.

Consequently, while Americans caution the Government of Israel to halt settlements in the occupied territories and to formulate a reasonable, comprehensive peace initiative, it is imperative not to mislead Israelis to think that they can continue to avoid the Palestinian problem—one which State Department spokesman Harold Saunders a few months ago termed "the heart of the conflict."

In fact, a recent Foreign Policy Association opinion poll indicates that among participants in F.P.A.'s "Great Decisions" program (admittedly an international affairs elite) better than three to one favor the "right of Palestinian Arabs to an independent state." And within Israel a new committee headed by a former Secretary General of the dominant Labor party, Lova Eliav, has issued a striking manifesto affirming "that this is the homeland of its two peoples—the people of Israel and the Palestinian Arab people" and "that the establishment of a Palestinian Arab state alongside the State of Israel should be the outcome of negotiations . . . without refusing negotiations with the Palestine Liberation Organization on the basis of mutual recognition." Even Israel's most respected Arabist, Yehoshafat Harkabi, has recently broken with the paralyzed policies of the Rabin government indicating that "the only obvious Palestinian body now is the P.L.O."

There will be no stable peace in the Middle East if attempts to avoid Palestinian nationalism continue. Consequently the future of the West Bank (and Gaza Strip) can not be solely determined by Israel and Jordan.

Iran's Nuclear Policy

To the Editor:
I am writing in connection with a column which appeared in the May 11 edition of The Times entitled "Atom Bombs for Sale" by Robert Kleiman.

Reference to the effect that Iran will make a bomb should Pakistan do so is an absolutely false supposition to which no credence should be attached.

I should like to erase any misgiving concerning Iran's nuclear policy by stating that Iran on July 1, 1968 signed and subsequently in 1970 ratified the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and has always been a firm advocate of the peaceful use of nuclear energy. Moreover, Iran has consistently played a prominent role in prohibiting and preventing the diffusion of nuclear weapons on the international scene and shares a genuine concern about the possibility of "small countries gaining access to nuclear arms."

Act-II. Years later. She says to him:

How do you feel this morning? Did you have a good sleep? How was your day? Did you get the work you wanted? Are you glad to come home at night? Do you like the children? What about the baby's face? Do you think it's beautiful? Do you think I'm beautiful? Do I look my age? Younger? How much younger?

I changed the sheets today—does the bed feel good? How are your Eggs Ranchero? Too much pepper? Oh, I forgot you don't like pepper. Aren't the shrimp delicious? Are the kids getting to you? Which one do you think looks most like me? Which one do you love the most? Why do you keep making that noise? Yes, I hear it. You're letting the air out slowly through tight lips and it makes my skin crawl. Is something wrong? Why are you so quiet? Do you have something on your mind? Why are you upset? What are you so happy about? Did you have a good swim? Did you have a good time? Does your knee still hurt? Did you call your father? Do you like my hair this way? Are you mad because I bought the cheap birdseed and the birds aren't eating it? Are you mad because I'm not caring about birds? Are you mad because I read in bed last night and woke you up? Why don't you ever get mad? Why don't you ever scream the way I do?

Did you notice I didn't talk about myself at the party last night? Did you notice I changed the subject every time the opportunity to talk about the children came up? Did you notice I asked them what they were doing and how they felt and how their business was going and whether they felt the ramifications of the gas shortage, the money shortage and the shortage of ethics and safety in 20th-century America?

Do you think I love you? Do you think I love the children? Which one do you think I've ruined the most? Are you mad because the laundry breaks all the buttons off your shirts and I won't iron them at home? Do you wish I were neater? Are you glad you married me? Are you glad we had the children? If you didn't know the children, would you think it was better to have children or not to have children? Do you think the last ten years of your life have been terrible, a little happy, very happy, or very terrible or none of the above? Do you think I'm too fat? Does my rear look too big in these pants? Would you rather I didn't wear them? Is this sweater too tight?

Why don't you leave me? Don't you feel like leaving me sometimes? Don't you think you could be happier with someone else? How can you love me after all the things I've done to you? What do you love most about me? Why are you worried about your business? You're going to be rich just like my father. Don't you know I married someone just like my father? Do I irritate you? Are you happy? What was the happiest time of your life? Do you think anyone's happy? Have you ever known a happy person? Do you think we have a good marriage? Do you know anyone who has a good sex life? Do you think Raquel Welch has a good sex life or Henry Kissinger? Do you think a good sex life is a myth? Do you think a good marriage is a myth?

Why do the kids always get hurt when I leave them with you? Why do they always lose their mittens? Why do you always run outside to look at an airplane when I'm trying to tell you something important?

I married you because you wore a hat to work and once, when we were dressing for a duty party, you brushed your shoes like mad and then turned to me and said, "This is going to be the kind of party where your shoes show a lot."

You married me because I hung a magnetized potholder on your apartment door for your birthday. It stuck and looked silly. You called to tell me you had found it and I knew you would marry me. Where is that charming child of yesterday? Where is her charming suitor? Gone the way of all flesh, leaving something different, maybe better in that place.

It could be, you know, that with all my endless questions and sometimes dismal projections, that mine, ha, ha (and not the Duchess's) is the love story of the century.

Empty 'Triumphalism'

By William Safire

WASHINGTON—In Geneva this week, the Arab-African bloc, strongly supported by the Soviet Union, is steamrolling the Western democracies and could be paving the way for a United States withdrawal from the United Nations.

Few people realize the possibility of such far-reaching, far-off consequences, because the meeting in Geneva is not of the United Nations, but of the International Labor Organization. Not many Americans are yet aware that our threat to pull out of the I.L.O.—which is the United Nations in microcosm—is a calculated warning to the rest of the world not to take the U.S. presence in the U.N. for granted.

We have been members of this worldwide labor group for decades longer than our other international associations, thanks to the willingness of America's organized labor to rush in where isolationists feared to tread. The United States has long cooperated on the theory that this was a "technical" and humanistic organization, not a political grouping, and the I.L.O. has done much, over nearly three generations, to improve conditions for working people.

But last November, at the urging of George Meany and Lane Kirkland of the A.F.L.-C.I.O., the United States served a two-year notification of its intent to withdraw from the I.L.O. The reason: The I.L.O. had been perverted by the Soviet-Arab-African coalition into an antidemocratic political forum, dominated by those nations where labor is most often a form of slavery.

What was the reaction to this United States warning? Among the other industrial democracies, which had been caving in to oil pressures, the reaction was salutary. United States Ambassador to Yugoslavia Laurence Silberman, a former Under Secretary of Labor and one of the few U.S. diplomats trusted by organized labor, was dispatched to foreign capitals with the message that the United States was serious, and that we expected our industrial allies to put an end to obsequious abstentions and stand with us in democratic solidarity (a word more familiar to labor than to diplomats).

Accordingly, when the Arab-African-Soviet move came in Geneva this week to politicize the proceedings by admitting the Palestine Liberation Organization, the nations with free labor movements—France, Great Britain, West Germany and other democracies—stood with the United States in opposition. Even the I.L.O. bureaucracy, which had always polished the Arab-African apple, urged the third world to refrain from what conference chairman

Michael O'Leary of Ireland called "indulging in ideological triumphalism."

But the third world had the votes and, like a foolish union that votes to strike even when it destroys the business that provides its members' jobs, steamrolled the industrial democracies in Geneva last week. The terrorists were seated.

In deference to the other industrial democracies that showed some gumption when we asked them to, the U.S. delegation did not pull out of the I.L.O. then and there, contenting itself with boycotting those sessions where the Palestinians speak.

But the course is clear: At the I.L.O., the Arab-African bloc will happily triumph at will, as the United States takes its leave. In time, the Russians will stop smirking as the third world begins to fix its demands on them.

After a while, it will become apparent that the political delights of embarrassing the Americans had nothing to do with the I.L.O.'s mission, which was supposed to be of raising the worldwide standard of living of workers.

The Americans will not be in the hall to listen to demands by underdeveloped nations that we share our hard-earned wealth with them, now, because they want it now. Nor will the Americans be there to show how living standards can be raised by attracting capital investment, fertilizing the soil with entrepreneurial freedom, and providing technical help to those who want to help themselves.

Instead, America's international labor relations will be conducted on a nation-to-nation basis. And therein lies the implicit threat to the United Nations. The fight in the I.L.O. this week is not really about Palestinians; it is about quick political "triumphalism" at the expense of steady economic growth. America is going to reject the notion that it owes the world a living, and having done so, we are going to gain new respect in the world.

In the campaign this fall, with the example of the I.L.O. before us, we will debate whether the interests of America and of freedom in the world are best served by staying in the United Nations, or by dealing one-on-one with other nations.

By carrying out our warning to withdraw from the I.L.O., we by no means withdraw from the world, or from setting the criteria for productive labor everywhere—we will demonstrate that we are not prepared to cooperate in the destruction of our values.

By carrying out our threat to leave the politicized I.L.O., we will sober up the intoxicated triumphalists at the United Nations.

Energy Dependability

By James W. Howe

WASHINGTON—The Administration's policy for achieving energy security is to decrease United States dependence on foreign oil. This would be done chiefly by increasing domestic energy sources, by energy conservation, and by coordinating our energy planning with other industrialized countries. This is good but not enough.

It needs to be supplemented by a long-range effort to make the international energy-trading system more dependable. After all, even if the United States could become "embargo-proof," this would not make us very secure if some of our chief trading partners (Europe, Japan, Latin America) were still vulnerable to an oil embargo.

Improving the dependability of international energy trade can be done in three ways. First, by increasing the volume of energy wherever in the world it can be done at least cost, because this will help restrain prices in spite of the cartel. Second, by conserving energy use everywhere in the world, which will have a similar effect in restraining prices. Third, by offering the oil-importing third-world countries an alternative to subservience to the oil cartel. Their approval of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' actions in international forums is believed to have been a significant factor in encouraging OPEC's hard line on prices.

For a small amount of money (relative to the $600 billion to $800 billion of capital needed to reduce dependence) a program of international cooperation on energy could be started that would contribute to all three of these effects. Production of energy could be expanded and diversified by helping poor countries develop their own domestic energy sources. In some cases this might involve advising them, or lending them money to buy advice, on how to develop their petroleum potential. (A recently released United States Geological Survey report shows, for example, that Latin America alone has about four times more prospective oil-bearing area than the Middle East, although not necessarily as much oil.) More typically, it might involve working cooperatively with developing countries to help them learn more about their other energy resources such as coal or hydroelectricity.

Even more frequently it might mean engaging jointly with developing countries in research on small-scale inexhaustible sources of energy. Most such sources (sunshine, photosynthesis and wind) are much more plentiful in the tropics, where most poor countries are situated. Thus, it may pay big dividends in terms of future United States security to make sure that there is a vigorous energy research program in the tropics.

This certainly proved to be true with respect to food. It was joint research in Mexico that helped to give us high-yield wheat. That joint approach has grown and prospered to the point where today there are several worldwide research networks on a variety of grains, each coordinated through one internationally sponsored research agency.

The same could be done with energy. There would be a much better chance for a breakthrough in research on wind or solar electric or biogasification if there were a research network for each that was coordinated by an internationally designated institution that could help avoid gaps or duplications, and exchange information, materials, equipment and personnel. Of course, some of this research in inexhaustible sources would not pay off for many years.

There is little likelihood that any of these steps would dramatically change the supply of energy by 1985 (the Administration's target date for energy "independence"), but for that matter there is not much likelihood that the vastly larger sums spent on sophisticated oil-recovery methods or nuclear fission will do so either.

But one early payoff from helping the emergent countries develop their energy sources and conserve their use of energy would be to convince them they too can look forward to improving their energy security by working with such a cooperative international energy program. That will give them a future alternative to exclusive dependence on OPEC. It may embolden them to withhold their support of any further unreasonable oil price hikes. And if that helps to prevent such price hikes, it will improve the energy security of this country and of our chief trading partners at very low cost.

Our search for energy security cannot be limited to seeking independence from the world energy trading system. It must go beyond that and take the common sense, relatively inexpensive steps that will help to make that system more dependable.

Dr. Work was also executive secretary of a committee of 25 that established the National Academy of Engineering. Born in Hartford, Conn., he received his professional degree in engineering from Columbia University and his Ph.D. in chemical engineering from the University of Pittsburgh.

He was a member of many technical societies, including the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the American Chemical Society, the American Institute of Chemists, The American Institute of Mining, Metallurgical and Petroleum Engineers, the National Research Council and the New York Academy of Sciences.

JOHN STORER, 88, CONSERVATIONIST

Wildlife Photographer and Author Filmed Birds

John H. Storer, conservationist, wildlife photographer and author, died Saturday at his home, 2 East 96th Street. He was 88 years old.

Mr. Storer, who until recently lived in Boston, made more than 30 films. He was a pioneer in slow motion photography of birds in flight and made a number of documentary films on the subject. He was the author of two books on ecology, "The Web of Life" and "Man in the Web of Life."

Mr. Storer was a past president of the Florida Audubon Society and was instrumental in starting the National Audubon Society's "Screen Tours" with the use of documentary films for educational purposes was in his infancy.

He received a grant from the American Philosophical Society in Philadelphia to study and make a film on the almost extinct California condor.

Mr. Storer also made several films for the Conservation Foundation under the auspices of the New York Zoological Society. One of these received an Edinburgh Festival award for documentary films in 1954.

Mr. Storer served on the board of trustees of Public Reservations in Boston and the J.N. "Ding" Darling Foundation of Des Moines.

A graduate of Groton School and Harvard University in 1911, Mr. Storer went into farming, specializing in scientific poultry breeding. He developed a strain of Rhode Island Reds that later made records in egg laying.

Massachusetts awarded him a gold medal for this accomplishment. Surviving are his wife, the former Elizabeth Claxton, a daughter, Ethel, a sister, Mrs. Henry S. Hall Jr., and a brother, Theodore.

ARNOLD WITTE, 59, CHAMBER LEADER

Was Spokesman 23 Years for Commercial Interests

Arnold Witte, the executive vice president of the New York Chamber of Commerce and Industry and long a spokesman for the city's business interests, died Saturday at University Hospital. He was 59 years old and lived in Rockville Centre, L.I.

In his 23 years as a top spokesman for local commercial interests, Mr. Witte, a close associate of leading business executives and government officials, became a familiar figure in the halls of power in New York City and Albany. He was an expert understanding of the labyrinthine processes of the Legislature and state bureaucracies and was frequently called on to share his knowledge of what he called "the hidden government," as a guest lecturer at local colleges.

Though he always saw his ultimate client as the public good, in ad eum when other powerful special interests were often arrayed against business, Mr. Witte's lobbying efforts were not always successful. However, he was not one to give up easily. His tenacity was reflected in his 14-year effort to obtain uniform rules to

Must List 'That Will Fly' for Legislative Cliche Lovers

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN

Y—in the State Capitol, people are always some boilerplate on the Legislature's housekeepers, but the building's russet Gothic corridors 'sly' and dank.

Albany jargon has been nurtured and expressions of needs essential to business conducted at antic pace.

Legislature is in session. An aficionado's garden of clichés would certainly have to include the following:

Heavy Lifting—An Albany favorite, alluding to the pulse-quickening interval when a long-negotiated, extremely complicated issue has to be resolved, usually against a harrowing deadline.

Turkey—A bill so bad, and badly written, that even the majority leadership's backing won't help it.

Contract—An essential term in politics, referring to anything that is a special favor for someone.

Motherhood Bill

snippet heard in the Assembly: "Who's contract is this turkey?"

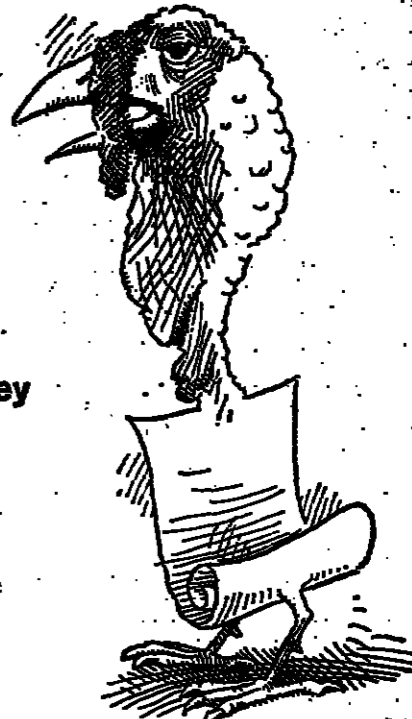

"Must" List—The thing to have if you're a legislative leader, in the Capitol, where one man's "must" is another man's "maybe."

Back Burger—Where items go that don't get on the "must lists."

Into the Tank—That delicate moment when a legislator has joined the list of those supporting a politically difficult bill.

Hang Loose—The period when a legislator has not made up his mind.

Off the Hook—An aptly brutal expression referring to that blessed state in which a legislator is told—with great relief—that he doesn't have to vote for some politically painful measure.

Turkey

Hang Loose

Albany joke: Why are there gaps between the signatures on the Declaration of Independence? Answer: Because of all the guys who were left off the hook.

Tuesday Night Special—Someone noticed last year that almost every default deadline besetting the state has fallen on a Tuesday night.

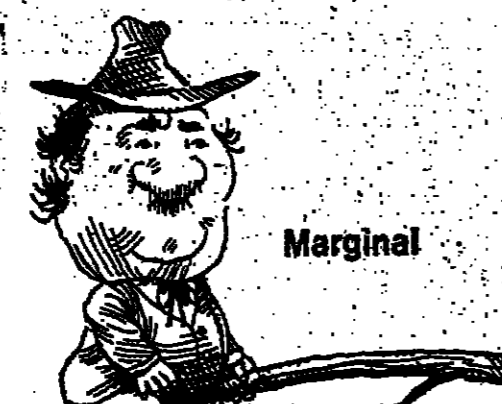

Marginal—A legislator who was only narrowly elected and is vulnerable to defeat the next time around.

Motherhood Bill—A bill no one dares vote against because it advances a cause no one dares oppose.

2 Foster Sisters Run Away to Protest Ruling Giving Natural Mother Custody

By BARBARA CAMPBELL

Two young sisters who had pleaded with a court not to take them from their Long Island foster parents of five years, after a bitter two-year custody fight between the girls' natural mother and the foster parents, ran away Saturday from the temporary foster home in which they were placed.

"We've had enough," said Cheryl Wallace, 13 years old, the older of the two girls, who told of their decision to run away in an interview in a midtown hotel dining room Saturday night.

They were referring to the foster parents from whom they had been taken, the Nassau County police put out a 13-state alarm for the girls Saturday night after their temporary foster parents, who live in West Islip, L. I., reported them missing.

The police went immediately to the home of the girls' foster parents of five years; George and Dorothy Lhotan, but the girls were not there.

During the interview the girls refused to disclose where they were staying. They were accompanied by two adults who declined to give their names but who said that the girls had got in touch with them after they ran away and that they felt responsible for them.

Cheryl and Patricia, who is 12, and their two younger sisters, Catherine, 10, and Cynthia, 8, had been taken by court order from the Hicksville home of the Lhotans last April 9. The removal followed two custody trials and several appeals and came after the Lhotans' New York Civil Liberties Union lawyer believed that all legal efforts to keep the girls with the Lhotans had been exhausted.

were taken immediately to their natural mother, Patricia Wallace of Long Beach, and the two oldest were placed in the West Islip foster home, to be returned eventually to their natural mother.

Girls Reject Mother The girls had insisted that they considered the Lhotans their real mother and father and that their natural mother was a stranger to them because she rarely visited during the five years they were in foster care.

Marcia R. Lowry, head of the Children's Right Project of the New York Civil Liberties Union, had argued that the wishes of the girls should be considered paramount over the biological claim of the mother.

However, the courts did not agree with Miss Lowry. Justice Bernard F. McCaffrey of the State Supreme Court in Mineola ruled that the natural mother was now fit to take care of her children and should have them back.

The Appellate Division of State Supreme Court upheld Justice McCaffrey's ruling and stated that the Lhotans had an obligation as foster parents to "keep the proper distance at all costs" and to prepare the children for eventual return to their natural parents.

Miss Lowry said that the girls called her yesterday and told her they had run away but that they had declined to say where they were. She said she would file a writ of habeas corpus in United States District Court in Brooklyn this week challenging the custody decision.

She said she believed it was unconstitutional under the circumstances of the case, "to make a custody determination based on the paramount right of the parent as long as the parent is fit."

Girls Give Views Cheryl and Patricia, sipping soft drinks as they sat calmly in the dining room at the hotel, said they had not got in touch with the Lhotans. "Mom and dad know nothing about this," said Cheryl. "We're afraid somebody will say they planned it, and that would be a lie."

The girls said they had visited their natural mother four times, but "she knew we came because we wanted to see our sisters."

They spoke indifferently about their natural mother but expressed concern for their younger sisters. "Cathy mopes around all day," Cheryl said. "She locks herself in her room. She doesn't talk. I was surprised, she didn't even seem excited when we came to visit. She says she feels everything has caved in on her."

The natural mother, Miss Wallace, has consistently refused to be interviewed by the press.

The girls said they had no complaints about the new Islip foster parents. Their home there is luxurious compared with the modest home of the Lhotans.

"Sure, they have a fancy swimming pool and an up-

Planes were reported to have bombed Palestinian and Lebanese leftist positions yesterday in eastern Lebanon, where Syrian forces were stationed. Both the Beirut radio, controlled by leftists, and the right-wing Phalangist radio, reported the attacks. Yasir Arafat, the leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization, was reported to have sent an urgent message to Arab heads of state charging that Syria had started an all-out offensive. National

An analysis of the 29-year history of the Central Intelligence Agency, prepared with the cooperation of the C. I. A. for the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence Activities, said that the agency over the years became a bureaucracy that ran amok because of conflicting interests and that it had failed to fulfill several of its essential missions. The analysis, written by Anne Karalekas, a Harvard-trained historian, blames a succession of Presidents, Congress, the armed services and the C. I. A. itself. [1:3.]

Six persons were killed and 30,000 made homeless by the flood that followed the break up of the Teton Dam in Idaho on Saturday. Property damage was estimated at $500 million. A 35-mile stretch of farm and grazing land north of Idaho Falls was inundated, and the flood was about five miles wide at some points. The number dead may increase when local members of the Mormon Church complete a house-to-house count in the area. [1:1-2.]

Democratic Party leaders in New Jersey seemed fairly sure that Jimmy Carter would win the victory that had been widely predicted in the state's primary tomorrow. They estimated that Mr. Carter would win a majority of the 91 convention delegates that will be chosen, but there was general disagreement over the size of his prospective majority. [1:6-7.]

President Ford, amplifying his opposition to court-ordered busing in a television interview, said that parents should have the right to send their children to segregated private schools if the schools did not benefit from Federal funds or tax advantages. He repeated his pledge to ask Congress "in the very near future" to enact legislation limiting the scope of Federal court jurisdiction in school desegregation cases. He said Attorney General Edward H. Levi has assured him that such legislation would be constitutional. [1:3.]

Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama has apparently given up hope that he will ever be President. His characteristic pugnacity was gone and he seemed thoroughly dispirited as he made a final, feeble effort to get support in California's primary tomorrow. A new poll estimated that he would get only 2 percent of the vote. He seemed almost relieved that his quest for the Presidency that began in 1964 was almost over, except for the Democratic National Convention next month, where he will probably use the 170 delegates committed to him in political bargaining. [1:6-8.]

Thousands of dollars invested in stocks and bonds from 1976 to 1974 were lost by the athletic association that runs varsity sports for the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs. The academy acknowledged the loss in response to a report by Representative Les Aspin, a member of the House Armed Services Committee. Mr. Aspin and the academy differed on the amounts. [1:4.]

When New York City's public colleges would reopen was more uncertain than ever when it became apparent that Assembly Democrats would not support the financing program for the City-University system that the Democratic leaders in the Legislature, who worked out a strategy to get Republican backing, had planned to push through. Upstate Democrats in the Assembly were reluctant to support a rescue plan for the City University when State-University schools in areas they represent were facing stringent budget cuts. [1:1-2.]

Ted Gross, who had been a member of the administration of Mayor John V. Lindsay and who had served a prison term for taking kickbacks on city contracts, was found shot to death in an automobile in Brooklyn. A companion, identified as Melita Sneed of the Bronx, was critically wounded. Mr. Gross, who was 44 years old, served as a member of a street peace-keeping team during the Lindsay administration and later became Youth Services Commissioner. [1:2-3.]

Elisabeth Rethberg, Star Of the Met, Is Dead at 81

By WOLFGANG SAXON

Elisabeth Rethberg, the internationally celebrated prima donna and for 20 years one of the Metropolitan Opera's brightest stars, died yesterday at her home in Yorktown Heights, N.Y. She was 81 years old.

Equally at home in the German and Italian repertoire, Miss Rethberg was remembered with a lyric-dramatic soprano with a voice of exquisite beauty. She was famous for her Desdemona, Amelia, Sieglinde, Elsa and Elisabeth and, especially, Aida.

Groves Dictionary of Music and Musicians states simply: "There was no finer Aida in her generation." She sang the role for her Metropolitan debut in 1922 and for her last performance there 20 years later.

In between, there were countless appearances in operas by Wagner, Verdi and Mozart both here and in the musical capitals of Europe, hectic tours with much travel across America and the Atlantic and strenuous schedule of concerts that normally ended with standing ovations.

A Strange Job
German-born and trained as a Wagnerian soprano, Miss Rethberg once complained a few years before retiring from the stage: "This singing is the strangest job in the whole world. A painter paints when he feels like it, a writer writes when he feels like it, but we—its 8:15, ladies and gentlemen, please open your souls, but sometimes you can open only the mouth and then the rest is routine."

If it was routine for her at times, it was a different sensation altogether for her public. Upon her American debut on Nov. 22, 1922, Richard Aldrich, critic of The New York Times, hailed "her high, clear, liquid tones of a singular brightness floating above Verdi's orchestration with infrequent ease."

"The Dresden soprano dominated sufficiently the noisier ensemble of the Theban problems with breath control, Elisabeth Rethberg never had any problems. She was one of those singers, like Rosa Ponselle, from whose throat floods of controlled sound came forth in an effortless manner."

Musically she had all the gifts. A sensitive artist, she was supreme in all schools of music. She was as famous for her Mozart as for her Richard Wagner as for her Richard Strauss. She was one of the Countess in Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro" and the title role of "Aida" were among her most successful roles. She also was an eminent Wagnerian in an age of great Wagnerian singers. She never attempted the Brunnhilde roles, but no body sang a more beautiful Sieglinde, Elsa or Elisabeth.

As a Richard Strauss singer, she created the Egyptian Helen in the Strauss opera of that name.

An Older Style
Miss Rethberg represented an older style of acting than is currently in vogue. It was uncompromising, but her gestures could be killed.

It was observed, however, that what she lacked in acting temperament she more than compensated with through her vocal acting. She was mistress of every verbal nuance in every role she sang, and as a result she could bring the singer's ovation vividly to life than singers with greater physical presence.

GETTY BURIAL SET FOR CALIFORNIA

Memorial Service Is Also Planned in England

By ROBERT B. SEMPLE Jr.

Special to The New York Times
LONDON, June 6—J. Paul Getty, the oil billionaire who died early today at the age of 83, will be buried in California later this week.

A spokesman, Norris Bramlett, said that there would also be a memorial service in England, where Mr. Getty had long made his home.

Mr. Bramlett said that Mr. Getty's will—which he described as "a completely private family matter"—would be filed "in a few days" and probated in California. Mr. Getty was thought to be the world's wealthiest man, with holdings valued at $2 billion to $4 billion.

Visitors were not permitted today to enter Sutton Place, the mansion set in 1,900 acres of rolling Surrey countryside near here that Mr. Getty purchased from the Duke of Sutherland in 1950. By the end of the day telephone calls to the state were not being answered.

Earlier today, however, an official of the Getty Oil Company said that Mr. Getty's successor as president of the company would be chosen by the board of directors at its next meeting. He did not disclose when that would be.

Normal Operations
The official also said that the directors had already provided for the delegation of authority and that normal business operations would continue.

Mr. Getty was said to have taken an active interest in the running of his business affairs until a few days ago, when he became ill. One of his three sons, Gordon, flew to England last week and stayed at Sutton Place when Mr. Getty died of a heart attack at one minute past midnight this morning.

Mr. Getty once told an interviewer that he began work each day at 10 or 11 and worked into the night, using the telephone to keep in touch with aides around the world. He said that he could no longer make the day-to-day decisions, but he added, "I like to think I'm consulted on policy."

It was not immediately clear what would happen to his property here. Mr. Getty has used it as the personal headquarters for his business empire, and one report suggested that Sutton Place would be retained as the headquarters for company operations here and in Europe. But this could not be confirmed.

Mr. Getty's car precisely followed the road to California. Aides said that he had long expressed a wish to visit his museum in Malibu Beach, Calif., which was built two years ago for $17 million to house an art collection worth many times that figure.

RICHARD FLINT, 74, GEOLOGY PROFESSOR

Dr. Richard F. Flint, eminent professor of geology at Yale and leader in the application of the radiocarbon method to the dating of glacial periods, died Saturday at his home, 285 Bradley Street, New Haven, Conn. He was 74 years old.

Dr. Flint, who stepped down in 1970 as Henry Barnard Davis professor, remained active in the field and had just finished preparing a new edition with Brian Skinner of "Physical Geology," which first appeared in 1932.

He was chairman in 1939-45 of the compilation committee for the glacial map of North America for the National Research Council. He presided at the 1965 congress of the International Quaternary Association dealing with Pleistocene and recent geology.

Dr. Flint was born in Chicago. A Phi Beta Kappa graduate of the University of Chicago in 1922, he received his Ph.D. there in 1925 and joined the Yale faculty. He was chairman of the geology department from 1957 to 1964.

Surviving are his wife, the former Margaret Cecil Haggott; a daughter, Ann Ogilvy; three grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

Publisher's Widow Made Home an Authors' Center

Ray Schuster, widow of M. Lincoln Schuster, a founder of the publishing company of Simon & Schuster Inc. died Saturday of cancer at her home, 76 years old and lived at 11 East 74th Street.

Following the founding of the publishing company, the couple formed a partnership called "M. Lincoln Schuster and Ray Schuster, Publishing and Research Associates."

Schuster's instinctive capacity to form a rapport with individuals sometimes resulted in the acquisition of a book for the company.

Sitting next to the Aga Khan at a dinner party she saw, as she put it, "a book in him," and it was duly written and published.

Mrs. Schuster had been for years a close friend of David Ben-Gurion. After the death of Mr. Schuster, she donated several thousand of his books to the new Ben-Gurion University at Beerseba, Israel.

Mrs. Schuster was a member of the auxiliary board of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and a member of the Friends of the Columbia Libraries, the Horticultural Society of New York and the Lotus Club.

She leaves three daughters, Pearl, London, Sylvia and Beatrice; two granddaughters, one great-grandchild, and a brother, Michael Persell. She was formerly married to Jacob J. Levinson.

A funeral service will be held at 1 P.M. tomorrow at Temple Emanuel, Fifth Avenue and 68th Street.

According to the Governor of Puerto Rico, Rafael Hernandez Colon, who was also on the reviewing stand, there are about 3 million people on the island and 2 million Puerto Ricans in the United States, about 1 million of them in New York. "We are undergoing hard times, both here and in Puerto Rico, but we will overcome them," Governor Colon said. "We miss them, the ones who have come here. To us, this is a moment of reunion. It has a big symbolic meaning for us."

In addition to Governor Colon and Mayor Beame, many other hometown mayors marched with the clubs formed by one-time residents who have moved here. "We have about a quarter of a million people here," said City Councilman Ramon S. Velez, president of the parade committee. "I expected half a million. The rain hurt us a lot." If it hurt in numbers, the rain did little to dampen the enthusiasm of the crowds as they cheered their hometown groups, pressed around the reviewing stand to shake hands with visiting officials and danced in place to the rhythms of the Latin songs being played. "We don't even care if it's raining or even snowing," said 17-year-old Gilbert Bonilla. "We're all Puerto Rican. Every time we see something about Puerto Rico happening, we like it a lot. We always will."

Member of Moon Sect Falls to Death

A 21-year-old follower of the evangelist Sun Myung Moon fell to his death in an elevator shaft in the former New Yorker Hotel, which was recently bought by Mr. Moon's Unification Church. The police said the young man, identified as Allen Stagg of South Carolina, pulled open an elevator door on the 20th floor and stepped into the shaft, unaware that someone had taken the manually operated cab to the second floor of the hotel, at 34th Street and Eighth Avenue. The death came less than a week after the fatal stabbing of a Moon follower in Brooklyn, where he was attacked while distributing pamphlets.

3 Gunmen Invade Social Club... Three gunmen invaded a private club in lower Manhattan, forced 30 patrons to disrobe, then escaped with an undetermined amount of money and a Lincoln Continental limousine belonging to one of the victims, the police reported. Several of the patrons were pistol-whipped but no one was seriously injured and no shots were fired. A Police Department spokesman said three men, armed with two handguns and a shotgun, broke into the club at 7 West 19th Street about 5:40 A.M. and announced a hold-up. They forced the 30 persons to disrobe, then collected money and valuables.

Hearings on Hospital Layoffs Open

A three-man arbitration panel opened its hearings into the impasse between the city's Health and Hospitals Corporation and the union representing 18,000 hospital workers, over the corporation's plan to lay off 3,200 employees and to close two hospitals to cut costs. Former State Senator Basil A. Paterson, the group's chairman, said that the panel had "determined the scope of the disagreement" between the corporation and Local 420 of District Council 37, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, and hoped to make nonbinding recommendations by Friday to settle the dispute. Lillian Roberts, associate director of the union, expressed concern during the hearing about the union's reaction if the recommendations are "negative." "Anything could happen," she said. Both sides' acceptance last week of intervention by the Paterson panel averted a strike threatened for today against the municipal hospital system.

From the Police Blotter

A 45-year-old Brooklyn man was robbed and then shot to death by one of two men in front of the Bushwick-Hylan Houses Project, where he lived. The victim, Sergio Rodriguez, of 300 Bushwick Avenue in the Williamsburg section, was shot in the back after an unknown amount of cash had been stolen from him. An 18-year-old Queens youth was shot fatally in the chest during an argument over a girlfriend with two unknown youths while walking a block from his home. He was identified as Anthony Shaird of 115-67 219th Street in Springfield Gardens. As he was about to enter his car, John Pendergast, 59, the manager of an OTB office at 75-41 31st Avenue, East Elmhurst, Queens, was forced by an armed man to open the office and then the safe, which contained $15,000. The robber then fled with the money, an unusually large amount because of the betting on the Belmont Stakes on Saturday.

New York Supreme Court Gets 9 New Judicial Parts

They Will Deal Exclusively With Felony Defendants Who Have Awaited Trial A Year—U.S. Financing Program

By ROBERT E. TOMASSON... Nine new judicial parts of the New York State Supreme Court, which will deal exclusively with felony defendants who have been in jail for more than one year awaiting trial, will open in the city today under a $2.7 million Federal grant. The new program, financed by the Federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, will involve the shifting of 18 judges and the appointment by Mayor Beame of eight to 10 new judges, one of the largest number of judicial appointments at one time by a Mayor in recent years. Initially, the new felony parts will hear cases in which defendants have been in jail for a year or longer. Eventually, the judges will hear cases in which defendants have been in jail more than six months. Half of Grant Used... The Federal grant for the new system involves more than half of the $4.8 million allocated to the city under a one-year program designed to improve the criminal justice system, especially the long-term detention of defendants awaiting trial. The funds will not be used to pay the salaries of the nine justices moving into the new parts. They will continue to be paid by the state and the city. A spokesman for the state's Office of Court Administration said the funds would be used for numerous "support" services, including other personnel. The State Supreme Court justices assigned to the new parts were: Burton B. Roberts, Gerald P. Cullkin, Joseph A. Martinis, Donald J. Sullivan, Max Bloom, Howard E. Bell, Nicholas Tsoucalas, Robert Kreindler and Gerald Held.

Riverside Church Installs Its First Woman as Pastor

By IRVING SPIEGEL... The Rev. Evelyn Newman, 49, a sparkling, her cropped brown hair tinged with gray—said, in ringing tones: "I have long been convinced that this world of ours is a spiritual kindergarten. The best of us, even at our best moments, are only unperfected saints—and who knows what we are at our worst. We are all learning together what it means to be fully human as Jesus of Nazareth—and we need to desperately catch the vision of ourselves as partners of the divine spirit which is Christ in us." "Some article referred to my installation as the end of a pilgrimage," she went on. "The end? No way! If I am faithful to my God I cannot become a preserver of the status quo—I must be a catalyst for change—and so must you. He has called us together as a family of faith. He calls us into mission... there are no limits on what we can do—but we must do it together." Her 23-year-old son, Peter, a student at Drew Theological Seminary, read Psalm 116 from the Old Testament and his brother, 19-year-old David, a student at American University, recited the Lord's Prayer. Beth, 13, sat alongside her mother during the 90-minute installation service. In his remarks, the Rev. Dr. Ernest T. Campbell, senior minister of the Riverside Church, said: "That she is a woman is secondary to the fact that she is a human being who is vitally in touch with the love of God. Were she to merely live among us, we would be gain. That she will work among us too calls for thanks to God." As Mrs. Newman knelt before the altar, the Rev. Irene Jones, chairman of the board of deacons (the first woman to head the board in the church's history), posed the installation questions of whether Mrs. Newman had a "sincere desire to promote the glory of God and the good of His church." Softly, she replied: "I do, I do." Mrs. Newman, a native of Baldwin, L.I., was ordained in the ministry of the United Methodist Church in 1970. She received her Bachelor of Arts from New York University, and her training for the clergy at the New York Theological Seminary.

Cathedral Rings to 700 Voices

By ELEANOR BLAU... Near the nave of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, the sound yesterday was electrifying—a mighty crescendo of brass, timpani, organ and no fewer than 30 church choirs. Most of the 700 singers were male, many of them boys with pure soprano voices that even at the entrance of the cavernous church soared above the others with clarity. The occasion was the 75th anniversary of St. John the Divine's Cathedral School. What better way to celebrate on the feast of Pentecost, or Whitsunday, than to blend the choir of the school, which began as a boys choir's boarding school, with choirs from all over the country and Canada? The festival is traditional here and, especially, in England. "It's a shot in the arm to keep up the tradition," said David Pizarro, cathedral organist and master of choristers. The Anglican tradition of a boarding school for choirboys is dying in this country. The Cathedral School is now coeducational. It became a general day school in 1964, and only 22 of its 235 students are choristers. St. Thomas Episcopal Church, on Fifth Avenue, at 53d Street, is the only remaining church in the country with a choir board school. But boys choirs themselves are thriving, though not necessarily in connection with churches. John B. Shallenberger, the president of the International Federation of Children's Choirs, who was here for the festival, reported that there were 1,200 such choirs in the United States, compared with 250 in 1962. He said there was a total of 4,000 in North America. Mr. Shallenberger is convinced that the increase is because parents have discovered that choirs have a "remarkable effect on the boys' self-confidence and ultimately their self-reliance and self-control." Mr. Shallenberger cited the teamwork of ensemble singing, and compared the choir movement to Little League baseball and the Boy Scouts. Girls choirs have also increased, but their numbers are far fewer, and purists do not mix boys and girls choirs. "Girls' voices are breathier," explained Mr. Pizarro, one of the purists, who nevertheless allowed the visiting choirs to include female singers. Boys, it seems, have a fuller sound, which Mr. Shallenberger attributed to the development of their abdominal muscles. On the other hand, Mr. Pizarro said, "between the ages of 13 and 18, boys' voices are no good to anybody." Jon Abbott, a Cathedral chorister who is 13 years old, confided some of the problems of his advancing years. "When you're younger, you have more volume," he said in an interview. "When your voice begins to change it gets tighter, and it's hard for you to sing things as soft and as flowing." And there's another problem. On his day off recently, Jon played baseball. "There was a lot of screaming and I lost my voice for two weeks," he said. "It's very frustrating." Some of the visiting choirs arrived by bus just in time for the rehearsal before yesterday's 4 P.M. service, which drew a congregation of about 1,500. Others arrived several days earlier to get in some sightseeing, and 400 of the singers had eerie lodgings: They slept in cots in the Cathedral's crypt. Before rehearsing the mammoth choir, Mr. Pizarro observed that, because of its size, "you work for massive effects, not picaresque details" and that "everything has to slow down or it sounds ludicrous. One piece on yesterday's program, composed by Charles Hubert H. Barry for the coronation of Edward VII, was particularly appropriate, he said. Bach would have been out of the question. "There's too much motion," he explained, "unless you slow it to a tempo no one could endure."

150 Pedal Down Manhattan to Promote 'Bike Rights'

Senator Jacob K. Javits as he and about 150 other bicyclists gathered at Columbus Circle yesterday. Braving a steady drizzle, they pedaled down Broadway to the Battery in support of bicycle lanes on the city's streets.

With a touch of joyous fanaticism about 150 bicyclists pedaled down Broadway in a steady drizzle yesterday to promote the theme "bikes have rights." The cyclists, most of them astride lightweight 10-speed racers, set off from Columbus Circle 40 minutes after the scheduled noon start in what looked like a two-wheeled veritable stampede as the rain poured as the noon start ride, mostly downhill, to the Battery. "I don't think we'll make it all the way down," said Peter Sauer as he granted off with a sort of mobile household on his racer. He was pulling a 20 minutes later. The sponsoring group—a committee called Bring Back the Bicycle, whose members include Senator Jacob K. Javits—is seeking to establish special lanes and parking for bikes in the city. The campaign received a significant boost yesterday when the State Transportation Commissioner, Raymond T. Chuler, announced that his office was studying three bikeway projects with an eye to endorsing them for construction with Federal funds. While noting that only $6-million in Federal funds was currently available nationally for bikeway projects, Mr. Schuler said that his office was pressing for construction funds for a bikeway along the Moshulu and Bronx-Pelham Parkways and for improvement of bike routes on the Brooklyn Bridge and Belt Parkway. The cyclists' only concern yesterday seemed to be social—the joy of getting together with other people with bikes, regardless of the weather. When Dustin Hoffman, the actor and admitted "bike freak," showed up, there was a flurry of celebrity ogling. But even he was forgotten as the riders of the downtown ride. The sponsors, meanwhile, said that they were planning another ride for next Sunday.

Today's Truant Officer: No More Fearful Image

By JUDY KLEMESRUD

They used to be called truancy officers, and the cartoonists always depicted them snagging youthful hookey players with butterfly nets or long hooks and then dragging them off to school. In those days, most children skipped school as a lark.

Today, they are called attendance teachers, and they do not use butterfly nets or hooks and insist they never did. Instead, what's left of the New York City attendance teacher corps — their ranks were decimated by last fall's budget cuts — practice their profession by reasoning, cajoling and flattery, and they often do it on the telephone.

In these days, they say, youngsters rarely skip school as a lark. Instead, they do it because of things like drugs and poverty or because they can't read or are afraid of being mugged in their schools. One person they apparently are not afraid of any more is the attendance teacher.

Decline of Authority

"Today's kids just don't respect authority any more," said Edward Wierzel, a 49-year-old attendance teacher, as he was making his rounds in Washington Heights on a recent morning. "Ten years ago, I went into a restaurant across from George Washington High School, and I told 35 kids they had better get back to school by the time I finished my scrambled eggs and coffee. They went."

"Today," he said, frowning, "they'd just laugh at you." Mr. Wierzel, who is big and burly with the tough face of a New York City detective, is one of 258 attendance teachers currently employed in New York City schools.

(In 1970, the number was 525. They are responsible for seeing to it that the 1,500,000 pupils in the city's public, parochial and private schools are in school rather than loafing in Central Park, or on 42d Street, or at the Bronx Zoo, or Coney Island, four favorite hookey hang-outs.)

Many Are Pessimistic

Many of them are pessimistic about the kind of jobs they are doing, mainly because of staff cutbacks and because of the societal changes they've seen over the past two decades.

"More than 200,000 schoolchildren are absent every day," said Rudolph M. Callender, an attendance teacher for 13 years who now directs the bureau of attendance, at 65 Court Street in Brooklyn. "They miss a total of 30,000,000 school days a year. Now, that's a fantastic figure."

Truancy has gotten so bad in the country's schools that the National Association of Secondary School Principals last June named it as the No. 1 school problem.

Among the sociological reasons for the problem, Mr. Callender said, were Watergate ("where kids saw older people doing the kinds of things they shouldn't be doing"), child abuse, parental permissiveness, the resurgence of teen-age gangs, and the courts' lack of facilities to deal with chronic truants. "There are an additional 3,000 to 10,000 children who 'just disappear' each year," Mr. Callender said. These include gypsy children and others from families who move frequently without notifying the schools.

When a pupil has five days of unexplained absences, he is liable for a visit from an attendance teacher. Before that, however, postcards notifying parents of the absences are mailed to the pupil's home, and then telephone calls are attempted. Then, if the manpower is available, a visit is made to the home, sometimes as early as 6 A.M. or on weekends if the attendance teacher thinks that it is the only time he will find the truant at home.

Despite the hazards of the job — attendance teachers have been beaten and mugged and, as a result, sometimes travel in pairs in high-crime neighborhoods — there seems to be a sense of adventure and esprit de corps surrounding them that is lacking in their classroom counterparts.

In fact, some attendance teachers like to think of themselves as a combination psychiatrist — mother — father-teacher.

"We can be the difference as to whether a kid makes it or fails," said Norma Gray, 47 years old, an attendance teacher at Manhattan High School. "If you can persuade a kid to go back to school and stay there, maybe he'll have a chance in life. If you can do this for at least 10 kids in a year, you feel like you've really accomplished something."

Like most attendance teachers, Mrs. Gray can rattle off on-the-job anecdotes, including the time she posed as a prospective customer of a gypsy fortune teller to see if there were any young truants in the household.

"I met a girl 14 years old who had never been in school," she said, sounding slightly outraged.

Irving Wisner, 47, an attendance teacher at a special services unit based in the Port Authority Bus Terminal, recalled the time when he and a partner spied a truant loitering near the monkey cages at the Bronx Zoo.

Kid in the River

"He ran down by the river and we ran after him," Mr. Wisner recalled. "We thought we'd lost him, but then we saw some bubbles coming up from the river. So we pulled him out, dried him off and took him home."

Max Smart, a 15-year-old attendance teacher now assigned to Haaren High School, proudly recalled the 12-year-old who finally returned to school after Mr. Smart learned what was bothering the youngster.

"He was smart and came from a beautiful home with books on the wall," Mr.

Smart said, "but whenever he got to school, he froze right in front of the door. Finally, he told me, his schoolmates had made fun of his body in gym class. I got him hormone treatment, and pretty soon everything was all right."

Many attendance teachers become attached to the truants they work with, but Lydia Jackson, 57, who works on the Lower East Side, went further than that. She adopted a 14-year-old Chinese girl named Nancy whom she had earlier taken into Family Court on charges of chronic truancy.

"The girl was living in Chinatown with a mother who could speak no English, and as a result, Nancy communicated with no one and did nothing except stay home and feed the family pets."

Becomes a Nurse

"Today Nancy is a registered nurse," Mrs. Jackson said proudly. "She is married and living in Florida. She calls me 'Mama' and my husband, 'Daddy.'"

Mrs. Jackson, like several other attendance teachers interviewed, said she often gets the best results with truants by using flattery rather than force. Today some affection-starved youngsters find this approach hard to resist, she said.

"You have to say sweet words," she said. "Like, 'My, you're so pretty today,' or 'You're so handsome in that new haircut, now why don't you go to school and show it to the other kids?'"

Mr. Wierzel used equal parts of kindness and firmness the other day as he made his rounds in his navy 1969 Chevrolet station wagon in the Washington Heights neighborhood that feeds youngsters into George Washington High School, where he is assigned.

His first stop was a decrepit tenement on West 133d Street, the home of 14-year-old female twins, both mentally retarded, who had not attended their special education classes since the first of the year.

"We had broken window this winter, and no hot water, and the girls had no cold after another," the mother said apologetically. "When a place is cold, it's very hard to get up in the morning."

Mr. Wierzel told the woman firmly that she should send her daughters to school the next day, because if she didn't, "we won't be able to help them. It's up to you."

On his next six stops, Mr. Wierzel, who earns around $20,000 a year, did not fare so well. The hookey players were not at home, or at least they were not answering their door. And so, around 3:30 P.M., he headed home to Jackson Heights, having spent what he called "another typical, frustrating day, with little hope that the truants he had contact would come back to school."

The next day Mr. Wierzel called and left a telephone message for the reporter who had accompanied him on rounds: The person who to it said he had sounded excited. The message: "The twins came to school today."

Variations on a Theme

By BERNADINE MORRIS

Inventiveness is not what every woman is looking for when she chooses new clothes. The majority feel much more secure with familiar things, perhaps in a different color, or with a slight variation in detail.

And so the majority of fashion designers, despite their reputation for being madcaps, concern themselves with refining and polishing rather than originating.

Some, such as the late Gabrielle Chanel or the current Andre Courrèges, having established an individual look, spend the rest of their lives interpreting it.

No Need to Be Bizarre

In New York at the moment there are a few designers concerned with new ways of cutting and draping fabric. The results are not necessarily bizarre. Their experiments lend zest to the business of fashion and are of special interest to women whose attention to clothes extends beyond making sure that everything matches.

John Anthony made his breakthrough with his spring collection; his fall one confirms the path he has already set out on. Basically, his plot is a simple one.

"I want my clothes to be modern," he explained. "The way I do this is by using the most luxurious fabrics in the simplest shapes."

His luxurious fabrics include silk crepe, jersey, cashmere, wool and mohair. And one of the ways he gets his effects is by mixing different textures in the same color.

Typical for evening: silk shirt, jersey pants, mohair sweater, all in beige.

Typical for daytime: silk shirt, sleeveless cashmere pullover, herringbone wool pants, all in gray.

Most Are Fine Any Time

Not too much difference between them. In fact, all the parts, except the pants, can be worn day or night. So can the silk raincoat Mr. Anthony likes to pop over them.

There are other parts, too. The silk crepe blazers, for instance. Coat-length sweaters. Big mohair coats, unlined. Shock-like jersey coats to pop over jersey separates.

One thing Mr. Anthony doesn't worry about is boots. Textured stockings and low-heel shoes provide the casual look he wants. Dresses are scarce, too. For evening, it's mainly pants. For day, there are skirts, most of them the kind you wrap yourself into.

"Everything's two-piece, everything wraps," Mr. Anthony says. "Nothing is labored—that's what makes it modern."

The New York Times/Don Hogan Charis
John Anthony makes a point in his day-and-night look of having most of the parts interchangeable.

The Name Is the Same, but the Herbs Aren't

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE

Many weeks after we printed a recipe for chicken Raphael Well (the dish was reputedly created by a chef of the late wealthy Californian), we received a letter from Prof. Maynard A. Amerine, one of America's leading oenologists, who taught at the University of California in Davis before his retirement.

The recipe we printed called for rosemary, thyme and garlic, but Professor Amerine wrote:

"So far as I know, Raphael Well did not publish his recipe. However, in homes and clubs around town, the recipe never includes rosemary, thyme or garlic. Usually it includes tarragon, though in the late Louis Benoit's recipe, he says it is optional. Oh, yes, parsley and chives are always used."

Mr. Benoit's recipe, which Professor Amerine enclosed, is from "Favorite Recipes of California Winemakers," collected and published by the Wine Advisory Board in San Francisco. Mr. Benoit was a friend and for many years owner of Almaden Vineyards. Here is the recipe.

- CHICKEN RAPHAEL WEILL
- 2 two-pound chickens
 - 1/2 lemon
 - Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
 - Flour for dredging
 - 1/2 cup butter
 - 3 scallions, chopped
 - 1/2 cup dry white wine
 - 2 tablespoons chicken broth
 - 4 egg yolks
 - 1 cup heavy cream
 - 1/2 teaspoon nutmeg
 - Pinch of cayenne pepper
 - 2 tablespoons minced chives
 - 1/2 cup chopped parsley
 - 1 tablespoon tarragon (optional)

1. Cut the chickens into serving pieces. Rub the pieces with lemon and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Dredge pieces in the flour.

2. Heat the butter in a heavy skillet and sauté the chicken until golden on all sides. Cover and simmer 10 minutes. Add the scallions and cook five minutes longer, shaking the skillet frequently.

3. Add the wine and simmer two minutes. Add the chicken broth and cook, covered, over low heat for 10 minutes or until the chicken is fork-tender, shaking the skillet frequently. Do not boil.

4. Meanwhile, beat egg yolks with heavy cream and add nutmeg, cayenne, chives and parsley, and if desired, tarragon.

5. Just before serving, pour cream mixture over chicken in pan. Cook over very low heat, stirring or shaking pan constantly, until sauce thickens. Arrange chicken on a warm platter and pour the sauce over. Serve at once.

Yield: Four to six servings.

A few months ago we printed a recipe created by Alfredo Viazzi, the New York restaurateur. It was for his spaghetti alla fatuciale, and one of the ingredients specified was "pitted, imported red olives." This was, undoubtedly, misleading, for we had numerous inquiries as to precisely what red olives are and where they may be purchased.

The "red" olives specified in the recipe are such olives as the Greek calamati, the Spanish Alfonso and the Italian Gaeta, all available or most of them sold throughout the city where fine imported olives may be purchased.

These olives, in a broad sense, would be called "black," although they have a purplish-red cast. One source for such olives is Kassos Brothers, 570 Ninth Avenue (between 41st and 42d Streets).

Pursuant to a column in which we expressed an unbiased opinion for Hershey's almond milk chocolate bars, we were visited by friends from Harrisburg, Pa. One of them had read of this passion and had traveled to Hershey, Pa., to purchase a singular gift, a box of candy of which we had no previous knowledge.

The Hershey people, we learned, offer greedy-size packages of their product.

The Cast

THE LAST WOMAN, directed by Marco Ferreri, story and screenplay by Ferreri and Jean-Claude Cocteau, music by Philippe Laroche, a co-production of the Italian companies (Pirelli and Pirelli) and the French company (Cinéma de la Pléiade). The film is set in a futuristic landscape of modern superhighways, centers and hand-dressed housing developments where each apartment has its own balcony (to the balconies) and looks as if it is installed by a carry.

Gerard is a factory engineer by profession and a colossal self-assured male supremacist by nature. He lives with Pierrot, his young son who doesn't yet walk, on a high floor of a spanking-new apartment house in a flat furnished with stereos, hip posters and all sorts of superfluous time-saving gadgets, including an electric carving knife.

Some time before the start of the film Gerard's wife has walked out on him to find her own identity—which is all right with Gerard, who doesn't mind playing mother as well as father to his son and who has no trouble finding temporary mistresses. In fact, he rather likes the temporariness of his sex partners. They don't question his ego nor invade the territory he rules as a father—until the appearance of Valerie.

Valerie (Ornella Muti) is "The Last Woman," a voluptuous green-eyed beauty

who teaches in the factory's nursery school. One night when Gerard goes to pick up Valerie, he also picks up Pierrot, and takes her home for what he expects will be another limited liaison. But Valerie is different. Between bouts of furious love-making she begins to settle in.

In the way no other woman ever has, she also begins to invade his consciousness, which, to a Narcissus like Gerard, is somehow to diminish him. When she tells him that he never succeeds in giving her an orgasm, she says it matter-of-factly, without accusation, but the effect is eventually devastating.

When she tells him that Pierrot needs to be touched, caressed and loved, he sees it as a threat to him. "I need to be loved," he yells at her. Finally Valerie, sweet, beautiful, apparently passive, persuades Gerard his sex is the root of his egocentricity.

"You are nothing without it," she says, which prompts Gerard to make the ultimate gesture to prove her wrong.

What is Mr. Ferreri up to? Sometimes I think I know and sometimes I'm not sure I want to. Then again I suspect that he may be the most passionately wicked satirist since Jonathan Swift. His satire is an electric carving knife that cuts two ways at once. Gerard is part buffoon, part tragic hero, Valerie is Eve, and the film, which begins as an uproariously erotic comedy, concludes as a spectacle so bloody it could send eroticism back to the closet forever.

The film is immaculately played by Mr. Depardieu, Miss Muti, Zouzou (as Gerard's first wife) and David Bessy, a little boy who apparently learned how to act even before he learned how to walk.

Film About Kirov School Finished by Earle Mack

MOSCOW, June 6.—An American-produced documentary on the famous Vaganova Institute of Choreography in Leningrad has been filmed and is scheduled to be released next autumn, Earle Mack, its producer, has announced.

Mr. Mack, a New York financier who is paying for the film, said it was planned as a 30-minute to 60-minute study of Soviet techniques of teaching ballet at the school for the Kirov Company, which has produced some of the world's greatest dancers. He said he hoped it would be suitable for universities and, perhaps, for public television in the United States.

Eighteen hours of film were shot in just three weeks by Soviet, American and Austrian crews, and everyone involved, even the Russians, seemed startled at how smoothly it all went. "It's a pleasure to work with people who are cooperative, people who are friendly," said Anatoly Uglov, first deputy editor of Novosti Television, the Soviet agency through which Mr. Mack dealt.

Mr. Mack said he hoped to make this just the first of a series of films about Soviet ballet. His investment and banking company, he said, was financing the film, which cost of the film, which includes a fee to the Soviet Government of up to $15,000 and two prints of the completed documentary.

The show, organized as a Bicentennial celebration, will include works by such well-known artists as Joshua Johnston, Robert S. Duncan, Edmonia Lewis, Edward M. Bannister and Henry O. Tanner, along with those of lesser-known painters and sculptors such as Julian Hindson, David Bowser and Gratton Tyler Brown.

Rare examples of Afro-American decorative arts, including baskets, a carved walking stick, face-vessels and an appliqué quilt, will also be on view.

The show has been organized by Dr. Regenia A. Perry, an Andrew W. Mellon Fellow at the museum. An illustrated catalogue will be available.

A BATTLE LOOMING ON SURROGATE JOB

Democratic Primary Race for Manhattan Post Draws 3 Possible Candidates

By MAURICE CARROLL

A primary election fight for the patronage-rich post of Manhattan Surrogate was signaled last night.

Members of the reform faction met at the Lexington Democratic Club, 173 East 83d Street, to endorse Arthur B. Blyn, a 64-year-old Civil Court judge from the West Side.

At the same time the Democratic regulars were meeting in the Biltmore Hotel. The party's executive committee voted "no endorsement," but one candidate who had appealed for its support, Samuel A. Spiegel, a 62-year-old Supreme Court justice from the Lower East Side, said he was in the race "all the way."

And a third candidate for regular support, Supreme Justice Alfred M. Asclone, said that he might run on his own. "I'll have to gauge it," he said.

The result after the county executive committee's vote in a small noisy room in the Biltmore Hotel was to ensure a "captain's choice" election in which, as the county leader, Frank G. Rosetti, explained it, "any leader can do what he wants."

The Surrogate's job, rarely in the public eye, is prized by politicians for its power to confer patronage upon lawyers.

The court was once described by Florentino H. La Guardia as "the most expensive undertaking in the world."

Each year the two Manhattan Surrogates administer more than $1 billion in estates and award legal fees of more than $1 million.

The faction-ridden county organization did what Manhattan Democrats do frequently. It split every which way when it became known that no one candidate could get the 115 weighted votes needed for endorsement under its system of apportioning votes.

Mr. Rosetti said the count was 99 for no endorsement, 92 for Judge Blyn, 30 for Justice Asclone and eight for Justice Spiegel.

Third Intraparty Skirmish

The votes set the stage for the third intraparty squabble in a decade over the Surrogate job. Fierce calls for "reform" have sounded in campaigns for the $48,998-a-year post, although there have been no discernible major changes in the way the office is run.

Judge Blyn sounded yesterday like an echo of the gaudy 1966 campaign when Robert F. Kennedy, then United States Senator from New York, got involved in the "reform" fight.

"We ought to eliminate the Surrogate's court," Judge Blyn said, and he promised, if elected, to speak up for abolition of the job he was running for.

Most of the court's work could be done by clerks, he said, while justices of the Supreme Court could be rotated to fill in when judicial action was needed.

"That way," he said, "there would be no opportunity for one judge to build an empire."

Similar calls were made by Mr. Kennedy's successful 1966 candidate, Samuel J. Silverman, who four years later quit to return to his former job of Supreme Court justice, and by Millard L. Midonick, one of the two current surrogates, who was elected in 1971.

Favors for Lawyers

A surrogate's power to do favors for lawyers—usually lawyers who are well connected politically—comes from his power to appoint guardians for minors or mental incompetents and then to determine the guardians' fees. This power is particularly great in Manhattan.

The seat the Democrats are contesting in the Sept. 14 primary—one a Democrat will presumably win in November in the heavily Democratic borough—is held now by S. Samuel DiFalco, who has held the Surrogate since 1956 and is reaching the mandatory retirement age of 70.

Judges Asclone and Spiegel both were picked for their Supreme Court posts in a 1968 political package that included the award of a Surrogate nomination and set the stage for the "unexpectedly high-powered primary" by Mr. Kennedy's adherents.

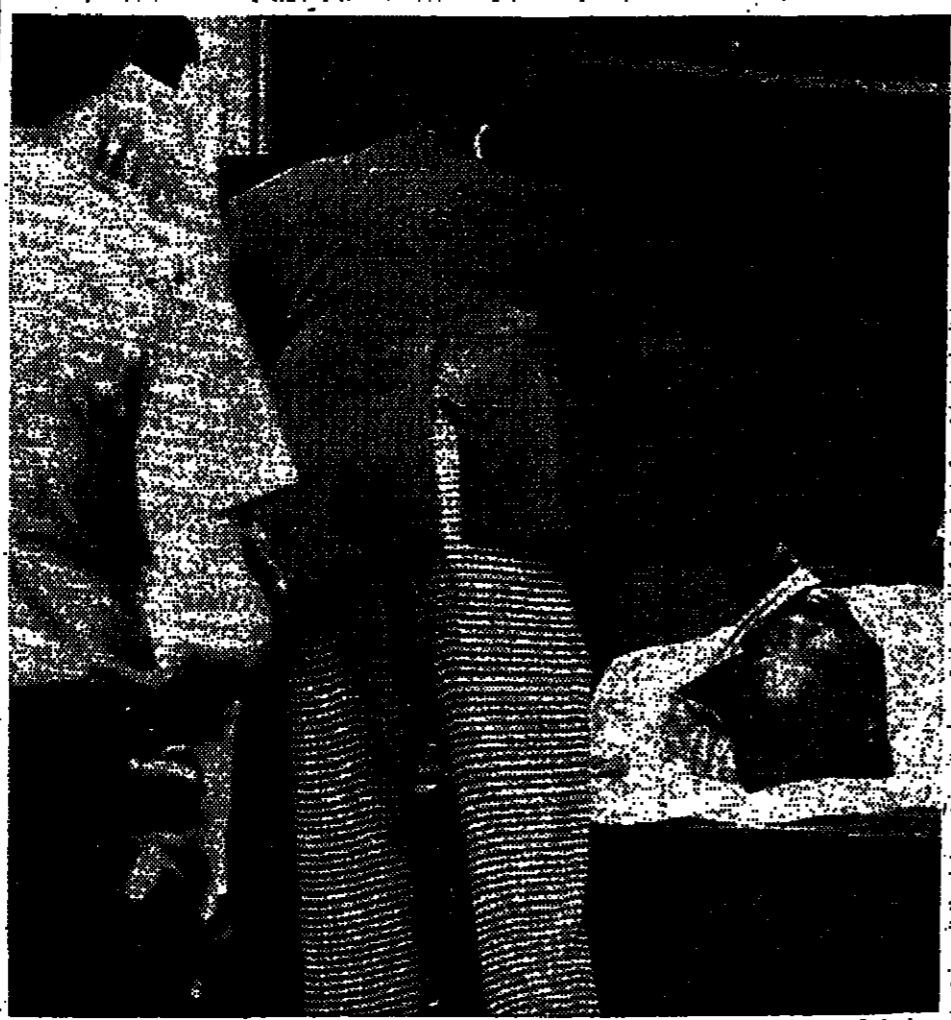

Judge Blyn got his court post through a 1972 appointment by Mayor Lindsay, a decision that he attributes in part to the accident of sitting next to the Mayor for four days as a member of George McGovern's 1972 Democratic Presidential convention.

All three have been rated "most highly qualified" by a panel set up jointly by the regular and reformer factions.

In the Biltmore corridor outside the executive committee session, while leaders conferred in separate clusters, Marie Lambert, a trial lawyer from the Lower East Side who had not won top designation from the screening panel, said she would run for Surrogate anyway.

"It's time for a woman," she explained.

Lewis Perkins and Betty Weinberg Ellerin, who had been associate at New York University in 1949, competed for support for a countrywide vacancy on the Civil Court bench. Mrs. Ellerin won by a 147-to-68 vote in the weighted voting system that the country out as a motive for the shootings, and detectives noted that the shots in the back of the head were an "execution" technique. But they offered no suggestion as to why Mr. Gross might have been chosen as the victim of an execution.

Sid Davidoff, former special assistant to Mayor John V. Lindsay from 1966 to 1972 when he and Mr. Gross and others were key figures in efforts to help poor neighborhoods, said that Mr. Gross had been a salesman-distributor of industrial glue for the last year.

Mr. Davidoff said he had been Mr. Gross's lawyer recently in completing purchase of the brownstone, in which Mr. Gross had earlier had only a half interest. He said that he was distressed by word of Mr. Gross's death and that he knew of no reason why anyone might have sought to "execute" Mr. Gross.

"With all the problems he had and with his having been convicted," Mr. Davidoff said, "for a number of years when things were tight, Ted Gross was the guy in the front lines, fighting for the neighborhoods and the city."

'I Made a Mistake'

Before the glue-sales job, Mr. Gross had worked briefly for the State Department of Correctional Services, starting as a part-time community liaison specialist on Nov. 14, 1974—two weeks after he was paroled from Green Haven Correctional Facility. On Jan. 8, 1975, he was made a full-time aide at $14,880 a year.

This was in the department's community chaplain program, but he left that job shortly after news articles about it were published in late April 1975. He told a reporter:

"I made a mistake, and I admit I was wrong. But I feel I've paid my penalty for what my crime was. I've paid my obligation. And I hope the public's willing to say, 'Hey, he made a mistake, but let's let him be what he's capable of being now."

The Rev. Earl B. Moore, the department's director of ministerial services, said yesterday that Mr. Gross might have found that hope was "wishful thinking." Mr. Moore added that former prisoners often found that "we don't ever let them forget it—we make them pay over and over again."

Mr. Moore said Mr. Gross had left the state post because "he wanted to move up, he had some applications for Federal employment since he had rapport with communities."

Federal investigators interviewed Mr. Moore about Mr. Gross, but apparently no Federal job was forthcoming.

Mr. Moore, a Baptist minister, suggested that Mr. Gross's rise and fall might reflect the pressures in society on "a man who moved from the streets to a high level, accomplished a great deal—and was a human being like all of us." He said that "the expertise and talent Ted had, positively employed, was something we will miss."

At Mr. Gross's home, a man who said he was a friend reported that the family did not wish to comment. Mr. Gross lived with his second wife, Fran, and two children—Kim, about 16, his daughter by his first marriage, and Dena, his wife's daughter by her first marriage, about 14.

Captain Coleman and Sgt. William Gardella, workers of the 84th Precinct station at 301 Gold Street, were trying to reconstruct Mr. Gross's last movements.

They said that detectives believed the Gross car—a six-or-seven-year-old model—had been driven from Manhattan. There were two theories about the shooting: either that it had occurred while Mr. Gross was driving or that it had taken place on relatively deserted Gold Street on the west side of the avenue, and the car had then rolled back, where it was stopped by the divider on Flatbush Avenue Extension.

The police reported that they were $14 or $15 still in Mr. Gross's pockets. First identification was made by papers he carried, including the year-old identification card for the state chaplain program.

Mr. Gross had been a community coordinator and recreation leader for the City Housing Authority before joining the first mayoral campaign team for Mr. Lindsay's election in 1965. He then served as an advance man.

Mr. Gross, who had an affinity for youngsters, became part of an inner Lindsay circle with Mr. Davidoff and Barry Gottheuer, another mayoral assistant. They would go out on the streets to prevent or cope with disturbances in the 1960's.

Mr. Gross was a flamboyant individual, dressed on occasion in red trousers, fur-collared coat and floppy cap.

In June 1967 he was named vice chairman of the Urban Action Task Force, under Mr. Gottheuer; in January 1970 he became a $17,500-a-year assistant to the Mayor on community problems; in August 1970 he became deputy commissioner of youth services at $26,400; in July 1971 he rose to Commissioner at $35,000.

But in the agency, which handled $46 million a year in Federal, state and city funds, Mr. Gross became known for a luxurious style of living. Mayor Beame, who was then City Comptroller, made public audits questioning lavish expenditures of agency funds for restaurant bills, entertainment, repairs to a personal limousine and airplane trips.

Comptroller Beame also reported that 424—or 60 percent—of 706 employees had been hired outside of Civil Service. Amid the investigations, Mr. Gross resigned on Oct. 7, 1972. On Feb. 20, 1973, he was indicted by District Attorney Frank S. Hogan charging that he had accepted $41,400 in kickbacks from contractors.

Mr. Hogan charged that Mr. Gross had begun arrangements to receive such kickbacks within days after becoming Commissioner, and had accepted the last $1,000 a day before his resignation.

On April 10, 1973, Mr. Gross pleaded guilty to taking a $2,500 bribe from the Urbanization Corporation and conspiring to take bribes from Game-time Inc. and on June 27, 1973, he began serving a three-year sentence.

Flattery by Congress Goes Into the Record

By MARVIN TOLCHIN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON — Congressional patronage includes the ability to flatter constituents by citing them in the Congressional Record. The citations are published in a section entitled "Notes on Metropolitan Remits" and are Congressmen's gifts that they were offered in ringing perorations during floor debates, they were, in fact, never uttered. Instead, they were submitted in writing by a Congressman for publication.

"Mr. Speaker, once again the editor of Suffolk Life Newspapers has taken an insightful and critical look at an important issue and written about it in a way that brings it right home to the average citizen," said an item submitted by Representative Thomas J. Downey, Democrat of Suffolk County. He then had the newspaper article, headlined "You Are Paying for Unemployment" and written by David Willmott, published in full.

The same issue of the Congressional Record included an article from "Westside," an excellent weekly newspaper published in my district," according to Representative Bella S. Abzug, Democrat of Manhattan who had the article inserted.

Representative Mario Biaggi, Bronx Democrat, inserted an article on "Tim Farley's All-Time All-Yankee Team" by Will Grimley, which had been published in the Nyack (N.Y.) Journal News.

Representative Stephen J. Solarz, Democrat of Brooklyn, inserted a statement in praise of Dr. Benjamin Z. Kreitman, "the spiritual leader of Congregation Shalom Torah," which had honored him with its distinguished leadership award.

"Rabbi Kreitman is a man of many talents and abilities," Mr. Solarz noted. "He is a teacher and leader of unmatched skills and compassion."

Of all the metropolitan-area Congressmen, Mr. Downey probably puts the Congressional Record to greatest use. Two recent entries included the listing of the names of several dozen 4-H Club Award winners in Babylon, Brentwood, Comack, Ronkonkoma, Dix Hills, Greenlawn, Hauppauge, North Babylon and Smithtown, and the following:

"Mr. Speaker, I take pride today in presenting to the Congress a new song composed by Mr. E. W. Frisbie of Copiague, N. Y. He has expressed his deep love for his

The Marx Brothers and How They Grew

By WALTER KERR

If you know that the Marx Brothers once tried to make a silent film comedy, of course, you won't be able to see it during the May-to-July retrospective at the Museum of Modern Art that traces everything from "Bunny to Woody Allen."

Everyone might have expected about three-quarters of the film to be the Marxes' first, the one British historian called "The Footage Still," but Groucho tells me he doesn't believe a word of it went hurriedly back to their natural home, stage.

A very notion of a silent film comedy must be preposterous to us now, Groucho's base baritone singing Margaret Dumont to (Groucho being the heel) throbbed, nonstop, in the background. Perhaps, wasn't Harpo a violinist? No, he wasn't, in any strict sense, Harpo and lecher, found in a girl's dormitory, bestowing his mum smile on a girl who sat idly hummingbird, riding on a running comary from Groucho or Chico's best, most inappropiately responsive, effects.

All you can't sit on a route, a freshly shuffled deck unless someone's asked you to cut the Woody Allen and friend in "Take the Money and Run" is his humor more native to screen than to stage?

the relationship between stage and screen has been ambivalent, the one felt by performers as exchangeable plays has persisted from beginnings. If both told stories and used the same actors? the earliest American comedies made by John and Sidney Drew to be four-wall affairs with stage performers settings usurping—aiming—the eye of the Mack Sennett and anarchists stumbled something else. If say, Frazzetta, improbably a second-story window, she heftily but a lover from an alighted keg of dynamite threatened explosion, after Frazzetta and lover flying through the crash-land, no doubt, the roof of an office justice of the peace. The era's reality had unexposed given birth to a new of fantasy. Film comedy seemed to do what stage play was utterly unable to, and so, while still a last, and its freedoms behind inventively extended, became most comedy itself.

Even so, the itch at interchange continued. It wasn't only the Marxes who took a fling at the silent medium. Eddie Cantor, Will Rogers, Victor Moore, W. C. Fields and various others made the try. Fields even succeeded, more or less. And Broadway plays, talky and visually limited as they were, still served as properties. Buster Keaton, possessed of an almost entirely visual mind, was wrestling with what had been a stage success when he made "Seven Chances"; luckily, he wrestled it to a fall, finally overwhelming his own nightmare improvisation.

Stage Door Deserted

When film at last decided to talk, of course, the back door was open and the stage door deserted, with the Marx Brothers virtually first on call. In a trice Eddie Cantor was on Hollywood ground again making "Whoopie!" and Ed Wynn, George M. Cohan, and Joe Cook all quickly took the plunge, these last three to fail. Why the failures? Well, there is always that quirky, exasperating trick of the camera's to contend with: It falls in love with some personalities, flattens others out. But another ambiguity had come to call, one that has never yet been completely resolved. Now that film was going to talk approximately as well if not as much—as the stage, now that the added reality of sound had effectively wiped out the lovely extravagances permitted by silence, what was film comedy? Stage comedy photographed from more angles? Stage comedy with a chase tacked on? A bastard form in which neither sight nor sound predominated? With the obvious advantages of angling and editing acknowledged, did sound film comedy have—deep inside it, essential as bone-marrow—anything absolute enough to distinguish it firmly and fully from stage comedy? What?

Everyone had to try to find out; indeed, if I had nothing else in the world to do (a pleasant prospect), I'd plant myself firmly in a seat in the museum's theater come mid-July—when sound films take over from silent—to see what, if anything, I could learn as the years roll by before me.

I know about the Marx Brothers. Their first two films were simply photographed versions of their stage musicals (I think I love "Cocoanuts" so much for the perverse reason that it tells me exactly what a stage musical of the period was like) and it wasn't until the fourth, "Horfeathers," that Harpo and Chico felt cinematically free enough to saw themselves through the flooring of a boardinghouse while Groucho in a football helmet—raced up and down the playing field participating in a sport that had probably once had rules. With "A Night at the Opera," however, they somewhat reversed gears: All of their basic routines were created for, and tested on, the vaudeville stage before they were incorporated into the picture. Are the Marxes really film comedians? I do not care. By any name they'd be immortal.

Continued Borrowing

But what about the screen's continued borrowing from the stage, in direct translation? Is the John Barrymore-Carole Lombard "Twentieth Century" really and truly a film? What about the Katharine Hepburn-Cary Grant "Holiday," so sleek, so composed, so intimately four-walled in that upstairs nursery? Or look at Tracy and Hepburn sitting at an overcrowded bedside in "Woman of the Year," actually an original screenplay—but isn't it cut from "Holiday's" cloth? Did the Hope-Crosby "Road" films do anything to help define sound-film comedy, and if so, whatever happened to the format? Was Red Skelton any help? Danny Kaye?

Notice how many of these came to films after fully developed stage careers: film comedy does not seem to be throwing up its own new instinctive masters. Has anyone yet made a signature of sound as Chaplin and Keaton made one of silence? I don't think so, but I keep looking. My own strongest clue these days comes from having blown hot and cold about Woody Allen. It so happens that I've never much cared for Mr. Allen's work on stage, yet when I go to his films—"Bananas" and "Take the Money and Run" in high particular—I dissolve rather quickly. Can I conclude that his humor, as such, is more native to screen than stage—and that we are on the track of something? In "Bananas" two men carrying their crosses to be crucified meet and become entangled, creating quite a traffic jam. For the stage, that's out. Expensive and impractical. It wouldn't even be any good as a line gag, as it probably isn't right here. On film I find it hilarious. And film.

If you come upon further clues, please notify me at once.

Triad Sings Black Composers' Works

PETER G. DAVIS

Triad Chorale's "Bicentennial Celebration" yesterday afternoon at Alice Tully explored a relatively unexplored area of American music—songs and chorals by black composers—last 100 years. Figuring prominently was the work of William Grant Still, an old last month and a pioneer among blacks in his country's serious-life.

Still has written a dozen over the years and variety of forms, generalizing his material on American themes. The major pieces of the concert were both exceptions in respect. The cyclical "Separation" for solo voices is a plea for bittersweet evocation of love, tinged slightly by salon sentimentality perhaps, but lovely statements in their own modest way.

"From a Lost Continent," composed in 1948 and receiving its first New York performance, is a four-movement choral suite conjuring up an aural image of Mu, a legendary continent engulfed by the Pacific Ocean eons ago. There is no text, simply vocal and concert sounds designed to capture the archaic flavor of the subject.

By using modal scales, open harmonies and primitive rhythmic motor patterns, Mr. Still has created an undeniably compelling piece of musical exoticism. The effect was further enhanced by the vivid choreographic interpretations of the four sections—denoted worship, dancing, yearning and magic—by the Chuck Davis Dance Company.

Works by 11 other composers gave an indication of the wide stylistic variety practiced by black composers over the last century, from the religious-spiritual tone set by James Bland (1854-1911) and W. C. Handy (1873-1958) to the more advanced techniques employed in recently written pieces by Ulysses Kay and Talib Rasul Hakim.

One especially impressive discovery was the final section of "The Ordering of Moses" by R. Nathaniel Dett (1882-1943), a choral epic on a Handelian scale and bristling with striking dramatic musical ideas.

An intriguing and thoughtfully chosen program, in short, sung with skill and enthusiasm by the members of the Triad Chorale under Noel Da Costa's direction.

Celtics Win, 87-80, and Take 13th Title Suns Foiled in Six Games

Special to The New York Times
PHOENIX, Ariz., June 6—The Boston Celtics, pro basketball's dominant team over the last two decades, wrapped up another National Basketball Association title today with an 87-80 victory over the Phoenix Suns.

For the Celtics, who captured all three of their playoff series by 4-games-to-2 margins, the championship was the 13th in 20 years. For Phoenix, an eight-year-old franchise that finished the regular season with a 42-40 won-lost record, the defeat ended an astonishing bid by one of the longest shots in the 10-team playoff field.

A sellout crowd of 13,304 in Memorial Coliseum and a national television audience watched an incident-free defensive struggle between two teams still weary from Friday night's triple-overtime, Celtic victory in Boston.

Jo Jo White, who carried much of the Boston offensive load throughout the series, was voted the most valuable player in the final round. But today, Charlie Scott, Dave Cowens and John Havlicek were just as instrumental for Boston.

Scott, who had fouled out of the previous five games and was bogged down in a 0-for-44 shooting slump, led all scorers with 25 points. He added 11 rebounds and three assists, and was the catalyst in the fourth-period spurt that blew the game open.

Cowens, playing the last 10 minutes with five fouls, and Havlicek, playing the whole series with a muscle tear in his left foot, combined for 11 fourth-period points that turned a 66-66 tie into a 77-71 Boston lead.

Scott scored 9 points and made three of his five steals in the final period. He also contributed two key rebounds as the Celtics closed out their third straight series this year on the loser's court, having previously disposed of the Braves in Buffalo and the Cavaliers in Cleveland. Oddly, the last four Boston titles have been won on the road.

With Cowens and Paul Silas showing the way, the Celtics continued their rebounding reign in the series, winning the overall battle, 53-39, today, with a 25-15 second-half edge.

Aivan Adams led Phoenix with 20 points, 11 in the third period, when the Suns erased an 11-point deficit and tied things at 54-54.

The teams lurched through the early minutes of the final period never more than 4 points apart.

But after Ricky Sobers' free throw put the Suns ahead, 67-66, with 7 minutes 25 seconds to play, Havlicek and Cowens went to work.

Hondo gave the Celtics the lead for good with a pair of free throws, and Cowens stole the ball, dribbled the length of the court and cashed in 3-pointer.

On the next Boston series, Cowens converted a pass from Scott. Havlicek hit a long jumper, and Cowens put in a whirling jumper.

The best the Suns could manage during this spree were a pair of free throws by Adams and another pair by Paul Westphal. They never got over that Celtic burst.

The loss was their second in the last 21 games at home. Havlicek, who was only one for eight from the field in the first half, moved past Wilt Chamberlain into third place on the career playoff scoring list with the first of two free throws that sparked the clinching spurt. Havlicek has 3,695 playoff points and trails only Jerry West and Elgin Baylor.

"You get yourself so worked up psychologically and physically," said Havlicek, "that you wonder sometimes if it's really worth it. But after it's over, it feels like 15,000 years lifted off your shoulders."

"We had to get it out all the way," said Coach Tom Heinsohn. "Phoenix has a fine team with a great shooter. When the game was up for grabs, it was a question of pure guts. Everyone was tired, but our guys have been there before and did it."

White, who had only 15 points today but led Boston with 130 in the six games, said:

"Our offense really wasn't that great, but defense will do it for you every time, and our defense did it." That was especially true in the first half.

Boston came out of it with a 38-33 lead, believed to be one of the lowest halftime point productions by each team and by both teams combined in the championship series since the introduction of the 24-second clock more than 20 years ago.

The teams were never more than 4 points apart and the score was tied eight times in a first period that featured 16 turnovers, nine by the Suns.

With both teams effectively shutting off the passing lanes, the guards accounted for most of what scoring there was.

Sobers had half of Phoenix's 20 points, and Westphal had

Dodgers' 15-Hit Attack Puts Kosman, Mets to Rout, 10-3

NEW YORK
JUNES, June 6—had followed their West dissipated in a sunshine to-gers pounded and his suc-runs, 15 hits tory.

Kingman. Today, Kingman's 34 1/2-ounce, bat was silent and Kosman's pitches were mistreated by the Dodgers from the start.

The loss was the first for the Mets on their 11-game swing. They play four nights at San Diego beginning tomorrow and four games at San Francisco over the weekend before returning to Shea Stadium.

Aside from John Milner's two-run homer and a minor rally in the ninth, the Mets could do little against the pitching of Don Sutton, who won his fifth game of the year against six losses. Kosman is now 6-3.

The Dodger victory, like the weather, was a treat for the 35,105 fans in attendance at Dodger Stadium. The sun was clear and bright, a cooling breeze rustled the palm trees beyond the center-field stands, and the Los Angeles bats were hyperactive.

The Dodgers got to Kosman early and often. The left-hander began the balmy afternoon by walking Davey Lopes, the leadoff batter, and granting a single to Bill Buckner. After Steve Garvey flied out, Ron Cey dropped a single in front of Milner in left for the first run of the long day.

Milner, who saw a lot of action in his corner of the outfield, is still slowed by a pulled leg muscle.

The Dodgers got three more runs in the second on Bill Russell's single, a sacrifice, Lopes's single to center, Buckner's single to center and Garvey's single to the left of Milner.

Milner got two of the runs back in the third with his seventh home run of the season. Wayne Garrett singled in front of him and Milner hit Sutton's pitch beyond the fence in right-center field. Milner had seven homers all of last year.

However, all was clearly not well with Kosman. In the third, Dusty Baker led off with an infield single, Steve Yeager singled to center and Russell drove both of them in with a double to left. Milner, running at less than full speed, just missed a diving catch on the hit.

That was all for Kosman, Continued on Page 48, Column 5

Homer by Gamble Gives Yanks Split

By MURRAY CHASS

Chuck Tanner, the Oakland manager, received an ecstatic telephone call from his boss, Charles O. Finley, after the second game of yesterday's doubleheader at Yankee Stadium.

Minutes after the first game Finley was so ecstatic he phoned Tanner long distance. Charlie had no reason to be happy following the second game. Instead it was the Yankees who were delighted because just when it seemed that they were skidding into their first serious slide of the season, Oscar Gamble socked a three-run homer with two out in the ninth inning and gave them a 5-2 victory.

The Yankees had suffered their fourth straight loss, a 3-2 decision, in the opener and were only one inning away from dropping all four games in the series with Oakland when they rallied for the dramatic victory.

"We didn't want to get swept," Gamble said, minutes after hitting his fifth home-run. "All the way through the second game it was on my mind. We wanted to go out and get the second game. We didn't want to be down. It was a game we needed to win. It meant a whole lot."

Stan Bahnsen, a Yankee of days past, had held the New Yorkers hitless into the sixth inning. But Roy White singled into their first serious slide of the season, Oscar Gamble socked a three-run homer with two out in the ninth inning and gave them a 5-2 victory.

Kite Conquers Diehl on 5th Playoff Hole

By JOHN S. RADOSTA
Special to The New York Times
PHILADELPHIA, June 6—Tom Kite, a 28-year-old Texan in his fourth year on the pro golf tour, won his first tournament today, and he never worked harder for any prize.

The Redhead won the Bicentennial Classic on the fifth hole of a sudden-death playoff, defeating Terry Diehl with a par-4 to Diehl's bogey.

And just to reach the playoff Kite had to make up a three-stroke deficit and beat 10 other players who had started the final round ahead of him. When the day began, Kite was at two under par, tied for 11th place.

He worked his way to the top with a final round of 66, five under par for the White-marlh Valley Country Club. Diehl, too, had to work his way through a crowd, but he had a shorter way to go. When the closing round started this morning Diehl was tied with Ray Floyd at 209, four under par and one shot behind a five-man cluster tied for the lead.

Diehl shot a final-day 68, and he could have won without a playoff had he not missed a putt by inches, trying for a birdie on the last hole of regulation play. Kite, who won a $40,000 first prize, had no time to celebrate his first victory tonight. He has a tee time of 8:45 A.M. tomorrow at nearby St. David's, where he has to play 36 holes in an effort to qualify for the United States Open.

Kite and Diehl finished the regulation 72 holes at 277, seven under par.

While it was true that Kite and Diehl earned their way to the top, it also was true that at least half a dozen other players let the tournament slip from their grasp.

On the last two holes a pair of those part-time leaders—Jerry Pate and Larry Nelson—faltered under stress and gave away the tournament. Playing in the same threesome, they reached the 17th tee at eight under par, tied for first and standing one shot ahead of Kite and Diehl. Nelson exploded spectacularly with a bogey on 17 and a double bogey on 18, dropping to five under par and a tie for fourth place.

Pate took two bogeys and finished third, at six under par.

The Bicentennial is this year's name for an event long established on the pro tour, the Philadelphia Classic. Because this tournament fell two weeks before the United States Open, there were few big-name players on hand. And the few there were, such as Johnny Miller, Billy

"God must be a Latin," Laz Barrera said, "because there's no way you could run a horse like he came out of the Preakness." Lazaro Soza Barrera is a Latin trainer. Angel Cordero Jr. is a Latin jockey. Esteban Rodriguez Tizol is a Latin owner and his horse, Bold Forbes, began life racing for Latinos among Latinos at El Comandante, the track at San Juan, Puerto Rico. When, after winning the Kentucky Derby, Bold Forbes finished third in the Preakness bleeding from a cut on his left hind foot, everybody concerned realized it would take prayer as well as veterinary medicine to get the horse patched up for the Belmont Stakes three weeks later. That's where God came in. "I didn't think we had a 25 percent chance," Laz said, "but between my brother, Luis and me and the blacksmith, we did a hell of a job."

This was about half an hour after Bold Forbes won the 108th Belmont by a neck from McKenzie Bridge with Great Contractor a neck farther back. Later Laz would agree that God and Cordero had done a hell of a job, too. One had helped Bold Forbes get ready to run. The other had kept him running when the Belmont's mile and a half had left this swift sprinter empty of everything but courage.

"He is a great horse," Laz said, "because he run this race with a quarter-crack behind. He win with three-quarters of a hoot."

"Are you going to declare tomorrow a national holiday?" Gov. Rafael Hernandez-Colon of Puerto Rico was asked.

"It is already a national holiday today," he said. "The race was telecast to Puerto Rico by satellite and the viewership must have been 99.99 percent."

Two More Yumps

In its 110 years, the Belmont has had runners of higher quality than any of the nine that Bold Forbes beat. The race had produced more impressive performances, like the overpowering rush that brought Secretariat home 31 lengths ahead of his field three years ago. The stakes has been run in faster time than the 2 minutes 29 seconds that Bold Forbes needed. But never has a Belmont crowd seen a pluckier winner, a finer ride or a more exciting finish than Saturday's.

With an eighth of a mile to go, Bold Forbes was in front by six lengths but McKenzie Bridge and Great Contractor taking aim on him. At the 16th pole they were getting close, and 100 yards from the wire it seemed certain that one or both would overtake him.

"He was still digging, though. Nature never meant this to run a mile and a half but Barrera, Cordero and his own stout heart make him run farther than he can. At the last instant Cordero switched his whip and whacked him once left-handed. Startled, the horse lurched away from this unexpected stroke, swinging his hindquarters out. He may not have brushed either McKenzie-Bridge or Great Contractor, but he may have intimidated them. With Cordero holding him together, he flashed under the wire. Angel knew he had it. The rider flung a fist aloft in triumph.

Unlike most watchers, Barrera didn't think Bold Forbes would be caught. When the colt still had a length and a half to spare, the trainer told himself the others were too spent to close the gap. "But probably at a mile and a half and two yumps," he said, "they would catch us."

Triple Hindsight

Actually, Bold Forbes ran a shade farther than a mile and a half, for after he broke on top Cordero kept him well from the rail on the first turn. He had room to take over the shortest path before reaching the bend, but Barrera had planned it this way because, he said, all horses are easier to rate out in the middle of the track.

Bold Forbes had burned himself out doing the first six furlongs of the Preakness in 1:09, and Laz was anxious to forestall another such mistake. He hoped for a pace of about 47 seconds for the first half and 1:12 for three-quarters. He explained that horses are worked on the rail in the morning and, if possible, raced on the rail to save ground, and when they find themselves on the rail they recognize it as a sign to go to work. Away from the rail, Cordero was able to take his mount a half-mile in 47 and three-quarters in 1:11 1/5.

"Were you disappointed that his last half was a slow 53 seconds," the trainer was asked.

"No," Laz said, "because it got me $150,000." It was really $117,000 but it seemed like more.

Now, that the Triple Crown series is over, hindsight suggests that Bold Forbes might have flied victory in the Preakness between his Kentucky Derby and his Belmont, if it hadn't been for the rubious pace set in Baltimore. However, that would imply that Elcomonist didn't deserve his Preakness score, and on the day it was run, he did. For that matter, maybe Honest Pleasure would have won the Preakness if Bold Forbes hadn't run the legs off him early.

The Latin bloc has plenty to look forward to, starting with the Travers Stakes at Saratoga. That's not till Aug. 21, 11 weeks away, but Barrera said that would be Bold Forbes's next assignment. Wouldn't there even be a prep race before that?

"He don't need no prep," Laz said. "He needs a rest."

Reds Rout Cards, 13-2; Phils, Padres Win

By THOMAS ROGERS
For six seasons with the Cincinnati Reds, bench has been a familiar word to Bill Plummer. Because of Johnny Bench, the superstar who has been handling the catching duties since 1968, Plummer has spent most of his time as a spectator on the long slab of wood in the Red's dugout. Plummer batted only .180 in 213 games before this season. It was no wonder that he sometimes said that he hoped Bench would stay healthy, so that he could Cardinals, 13-2, in St. Louis. "It was a dream day for an extra man," said Plummer, whose average soared to .305, his highest in the major leagues. "I can't remember ever having a day like this, unless it was in the Little League. This is the first year I got to play much in spring training and play this much this early. I'm not going to hit .300, but I'm not going to embarrass myself, either. Confidence is a big thing." After a run-producing single in the second inning, he belted a three-run triple in the third and a three-run homer in the sixth. Pat Zachry, Plummer's batterymate, took advantage of Plummer's slugging and a 17-hit Reds' attack to coast to his fifth victory in six decisions, setting down the Cardinals on five hits through seven innings.

Padres 6, Pirates 1.
AT PITTSBURGH—A free-jacket promotion helped lure a crowd of 51,726, a record for Three Rivers Stadium, but the home fans saw the Pirates held in check by Brent Strom. The left-handed hurler allowed only seven hits in nine decisions. For the Padres, Enzo Hernandez and Dave Winfield each collected three hits. John Candelaria, who was charged with all San Diego's runs in five innings of work, lost and evened his won-lost record at 4-4.

AT BOSTON—Carl Yastrzemski, who drove in two runs with a pair of singles, reached the 4,000 mark in total hits. In his 18th season, Yaz became the 34th player to reach that plateau. Cecil Cooper also drove in two Boston runs as Nolan Ryan absorbed his seventh loss in 11 decisions. Dick Pole pitched seven scoreless innings on the way to his second victory against three losses.

AT BALTIMORE—Dan Ford crashed his ninth home run of the season in the ninth inning to break a 2-2 tie and hand Jim Palmer his sixth loss against six victories. Earlier the Twins had scored on Rod Carew's two-run single in the third inning. The Orioles tied it on a walk to Al Bumbry and a double by Mark Belanger in the sixth, and an unearned run in the eighth resulting from Mike Cubbage's throwing error.

Yacht Racers Clear Channel

LONDON, June 6 (AP)—Lone yachtmen from 17 countries, racing for Newport, R. I., headed into the open Atlantic today after battling dense fog and light winds through the English Channel. The 73-foot ketch Pen Duick VI, with Eric Tabarly of France at the helm, was the first competitor seen passing The Lizard, the southwesternmost point of the English mainland, a few hours after dawn today.

Akii-Bua, Drut Win in Hurdles

DORTMUND, West Germany June 6 (AP)—John Akii-Bua of Uganda, the Olympic champion, posted the year's best time in the 400-meter hurdles today and Guy Drut of France whipped his East German rival, Frank Seibert, in the 110-meter hurdles in highlights of an Olympic times qualification track and field meet. Akii-Bua led from the first hurdle as he was electrically timed in 48.58 seconds on an artificial track. Drut, the silver medalist in 1972 at Munich, was clocked in 13.59 seconds running into a stiff headwind.

He left the game having given up 10 hits and 6 runs in two innings of work. Rick Baldwin, his replacement, restored a semblance of order by retiring the side with the help of Ron Hodges' pickoff of Russell at second. Baldwin's effectiveness was short-lived. In the next inning he walked Buckner, the leadoff batter, and Garvey followed with a double down the right-field line to put runners on second and third. Cey was walked intentionally and Buckner scored when Joe Ferguson grounded into a right angle play. Garvey came home on Baker's looping single down the left-field line.

About the Mets

Joe Frazier, the Mets rookie manager, has taken to sitting in the last seat in the dugout toward first base instead of the usual managerial position in the dugout corner nearest home plate. He used the superstition to break losing streaks in the minor leagues. Before yesterday's game he was 2-1 from his new position. Felix Millan, the regular second baseman, missed his 12th game with a sore left shoulder and Bud Harrelson, the regular shortstop, missed his 11th with a cut and bruised right calf.

Gamble Homers for Yankees

The blow made a winner of Dave Pagan, the 25-year-old right-hander who allowed just six hits. He was the first Yankees pitcher other than the four regular starters to start a game. "I hope this puts us back in a winning streak," said Pagan, who lost a chance to start last Sunday when he came down with strep throat. Gamble's blow also took some of the heat off Sandy Alomar, who twice failed in his role of base stealer. The closest thing the Yankees have to a designated runner—the A's have two—Alomar was sent into each game to steal second base and get into position to score the tying run.

The Celtics' Charlie Scott, who had fouled out of the five previous final-round games, keeping his eye on the referee as he defended against the Suns' Paul Westphal. No foul was called on the play. Celtics won, 87-86.

Championship Look: The Celtic Tradition

By SAM GOLDAPER
Fred Carter, once said, "The Boston Celtics know how to win, not how to lose. They get fluke wins, sloppy wins, great wins, every kind of win. That's the mark of a great team."
What the Philadelphia 76er backcourtman was really talking about was "Celtic Pride." It has become a way of life in Boston, rather than just a slogan.
With talent, hustle, unity and total selfishness, the Celtics won their 13th National Basketball Association championship in 20 seasons yesterday by defeating the Suns, 87-80, in Phoenix.
Red Auerbach, the president and general manager of the Celtics and coach of nine of the championship teams, recently spoke of Boston's winning tradition and ways.
"You aren't born a Celtic," said Auerbach, "you learn to be one. The learning is there if you want it. Look around you when the Celtics travel, they dress well. If you dress like a champion, you'll play like one. It's no accident that so many former Celtics are pro and college coaches."
Learning to be a Celtic was apparent in the conversion of Charlie Scott. When he came to Boston in an off-season trade with the Phoenix Suns for Paul Westphal, Scott's reputation was that of an undisciplined shooter, a one-sided player, not schooled in defense and a trouble-maker.
Instead, Scott quickly fit into the Celtic mold. In his best game of the championship series yesterday his statistics were those of an unselfish player. He scored 25 points, grabbed 11 rebounds, had three assists, stole the ball five times and played well defensively.

Miss Bradley Wins 4-Way Golf Playoff

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
Special to The New York Times
New Rochelle, N. Y., June 6—Pat Bradley, a 25-year-old long-driving golfer, won a tournament on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour for the first time today. She sank a 2-foot putt for a par on the second hole of a sudden-death playoff in the Girl-Talk Classic at Wykagyl Country Club for the victory.
Judy Rankin, who has won three times and is the leading money-winner of the tour this year, took three putts from 33 feet for a bogey on the second extra hole of the playoff that began with four golfers, Sandra Post, the red-haired Canadian, and Bonnie Lauer, a rookie, fell by the wayside at the first extra hole when Mrs. Rankin and Miss Bradley birdied the hole.
The four finished the 3-day tournament deadlocked at 217, one over par, for the regulation 54 holes. This was the L.P.G.A.'s fifth consecutive triumph to be settled on the last holes of regulation or in a playoff.
Miss Bradley, who has been a tour player since January of 1974, took the $14,000 winner's check after nearly letting it out of her grasp on the 54th hole. Leading the field by a stroke as she teed off on the final regulation hole, the Massachusetts golfer took a bogey 6 and she was somewhat lucky to do that.
Miss Bradley trails by 5

When she started today's round, Miss Bradley was trailing by five strokes, tied with Miss Lauer and Mrs. Rankin for fifth place at one over par. Miss Post began the day tied with Betty Burfeindt at even par, two strokes back of the leaders, Laura Bangh and Sandra Palmer.
Miss Bradley, Miss Lauer and Mrs. Rankin shot par golf on the final day with rounds of 33, 39-72; 34, 38-72, and 38, 34-72, respectively. Miss Post carded a 38, 35-73.
Miss Bangh missed the playoff by a stroke with a bogey on the last hole and finished with a 218. Miss Palmer dropped back with bogey at the sixth and a double-bogey at the eighth. Miss Burfeindt took four shots out of a bunker at the second hole that set her back.
The lead was shared or owned outright by Miss Bangh, Miss Bradley, Miss Burfeindt, and Miss Palmer at some time as heavy rain fell during most of the regulation 18 holes in the final round. But it was Miss Bradley, who was in the best position going into the 54th hole.
She snap hooked her drive "when I tightened my grip too much and, yes, maybe choked, too." The ball was in an unplayable lie in deep woods. But a two club length lift gave her a No. 6 iron shot toward the green of the par 5 hole.
Still in the left rough, however, Miss Bradley got to the green and two-putted from 50 feet while Miss Lauer and Mrs. Rankin awaited the outcome. They had finished. Miss Post, playing with Miss Bradley, parred the last hole without trouble and thus brought on a four-way playoff.
At the par-5 first extra hole all four hit fine drives, all but Miss Post hit good second shots as the Canadian's ball trickled into rough on the left. Then came thrilling wedge approach shots by all four right for the stick with Mrs. Rankin hitting first within 3 feet of the hole.

Then Miss Bradley hit inside Mrs. Rankin and drew big cheers from the gallery. Miss Lauer approached within 8 feet and Miss Post, whose shot flew from the rough, went over the pin to 25 feet back of the stick.
Miss Bradley and Mrs. Rankin easily sank their putts and went on to the next hole as the other two missed their putts for birdies.
Mrs. Rankin's approach at the second extra hole bounced off the top of a bunker and landed just on the putting surface. Miss Bradley looked her approach into the left fringe but two-putted from 42 feet to get a 4 and $14,000 after Mrs. Rankin's second putt from 3 feet slid by the cup.
Mrs. Rankin lost the L.P.G.A. title by a stroke last week when Miss Burfeindt won with a par on the 72nd and last hole. But Mrs. Rankin won $5,933.34 today to increase her 1976 earnings to $72,775. Miss Lauer and Miss Post earned $5,933.33 each.

MINIATURE PINSCHER JUDGED BEST
By WALTER R. FLETCHER
Special to The New York Times
DENVER, June 6—A dream came true at the Southern Colorado Kennel Club show in the Hall of Education Building today, when a sparkling miniature pinscher was named best of 3,332 dogs. She was Ch. Jay Mac's Impossible Dream, owned by Dorothy De Maria of Downey, Calif., and handled by Joe Waterman.
The red 5-pounder had by far the best record among the finalists, for she had been best in show 47 times. She also had won the Kennel-Run Award in 1974 and 1975 for having taken more groups than any other toy in America.
Impy has been shown sparingly this year. Since Westminster, where she failed to place in the group, she's been best in show at Beverly Hills and Orange Empire. On the way to the final, she was best toy for the 130th time.
"That was the magic number for which we have been striving," said Waterman. "Now we will only show her from time to time."

Alexander Captures Canoe Race Honors
PHOENICIA, N.Y., June 6 (AP)—Bob Alexander of East Brunswick, N.J., won the one-man kayak and canoe races, and shared the two-man canoe honors today at the White Water Canoe and Kayak Atlantic Division American Canoe Association championship here at Esopus Creek.
Alexander teamed with Fred Hesselgrave of West Orange, N.J., to win the two-man canoe event.
Vladimir Banha of New York was second in a one-man kayak, followed by Hesselgrave. Timothy Bliss of Mountain Lakes, N.J., was second in the one-man canoe race with Cleve Tevford of New York, third.
Hesselgrave's wife, Mary, won the one-woman race, beating Lynn Wilson of Pluckemin, N.J., and Joan MacIntyre of Pelham, N.Y.

DEMOCRATS DECRY PARTY'S 'DISUNITY'

Carter, while the Democratic strongman at the other end of the state, Joseph F. Crangle, the Erie County leader who was deposed as state chairman by the Governor, is leading a national campaign for Mr. Humphrey.

Governor Carey has yet to express a Presidential preference. As a result he could go into the convention in his own state with almost no bargaining power. Thus, his chance of landing a place on the national ticket—normally at least a fair possibility for a New York Governor—is fading fast, even some of his admirers concede.

The Democratic divisions are also evident in the contest for the Democratic nomination to oppose Senator James L. Buckley, the Conservative-Republican.

The Mayor, again demonstrating his independence of his fellow Brooklyn Democrat, the Governor, encouraged the city's Democratic leaders to support City Council President Paul O'Dwyer, who has spent a lifetime as a political maverick, but at 68 is now considered by the county leaders as the least objectionable of the Senate prospects.

Mr. Crangle and many upstate Democratic leaders split prepared to back Daniel P. Moynihan, the former United States representative at the United Nations, as the candidate who they believed would run strongest against the liberal wing of the party.

2 Wealthy Hopefuls
Amidst that confusion, two wealthy men with political power, bases in Albany and Andrew Stein and Abraham Hirschfeld, a builder — are prepared to spend a great deal in the campaign for nomination.

The chaos is also evident to party officials in Democratic ranks in the Legislature and in the Democratic State Committee.

Relations between the Governor and the Legislature's most powerful Democrat, Assembly Speaker Stanley Steingut, another "Brooklyn boy," have always been cool but they are now positively frigid, with Mr. Steingut believing that the Governor does not respect him and some Carey aides saying Mr. Steingut is right.

One result is that for the first time in more than a century, a gubernatorial veto was overridden and a gubernatorial appointment rejected, although Mr. Carey's fellow Democrats control the Assembly. Another is that Mr. Steingut and Mr. Crangle, his chief of staff, run their own legislative patronage operation.

FIELD EVENTS

The state committee, which will be designating a Senate candidate next week, is now nominally headed by a Buffalo ward leader, Jessica Johnson, who was unknown outside Buffalo and was elected first vice chairman of the state committee in April because the then state chairman Patrick J. Cunningham, became confused and read off her name as a vice chairman instead of assistant treasurer, the post she was supposed to get.

Mr. Cunningham, who is also the Bronx Democratic leader, has since been indicted on charges growing out of Maurice H. Nader's investigation of the alleged sale of judgeships in the Bronx. Under pressure from the Governor, he took a leave of absence as state chairman.

SOME QUESTIONS

The Governor has selected Robert F. Wagner, the former Mayor of New York and a frequent Democratic organization baiter, as his state chairman, but there is considerable question among Democrats whether the Governor or the former Mayor, who has many enemies among county leaders, have the inclination or the power to lead the party.

Some Carey aides say in the era of Watergate and voter disdain for politics as usual, the Governor is better off keeping his distance from the party. But many Democrats question whether the party is better off with an image similar to Coxey's army in a year when New York voters will help select a President, Senator, members of the House of Representatives and state legislators.

Staff of City U. Enduring Lack of Paychecks

By JOHN L. HESS

The staff of the City University of New York has received no pay since the end of April, but when its teachers were asked about their troubles, many of them said the worst was the feeling that their students have been stranded.

"I have students who come to class after an eight-hour work shift," said Pearl Gasarch, who teaches English at New York City Community College in Brooklyn. "They drop their eyes up, but they get there."

Only when urged to talk about her own situation did Miss Gasarch mention that she was unable to meet the tuition for an advanced summer course she was to take in Pittsburgh.

Florence Greco, an administrative assistant at Staten Island Community College, had dipped into savings to meet one of her son's tuition bills at St. John's University, but had shelved plans to send her other son to camp.

On Borrowed Time

David Fields, a special assistant to the president of Queens College, said he had been living off his wife's paycheck, to a degree. "It's a matter of ducking into hallways and avoiding my landlord," he explained.

David M. Korman, a research assistant at Queens, says his savings will run out by the middle of the month, and he has been shopping for a bank loan. Meanwhile, he said, he has put off repairing his car.

and has not gone to a movie in a long time.

A skeleton staff of maintenance men has been working without paychecks. One of them at the City College campus, Frank Schneider, said he was borrowing from his pension fund to meet a mortgage payment. "I've called the bank and explained my situation," he said, "but they said they would still hit me with a penalty if I don't come through."

"Will the City of New York defer foreclosures?" asked Grace Petrone, dean of community programs at Staten Island Community College. "They didn't defer my payment for a traffic ticket yesterday, and they owe me a lot more than I owe them."

Daniel Collins, who teaches education at Richmond College, said that he had received a threat of foreclosure, but could not meet his mortgage payment. "Presumably, I'll get my unemployment compensation," he said, "but I'll use that to get food and the mortgage is not my first priority."

Unemployment offices around the city have been crowded all week with City University staff members who did not get their checks on May 28, as they were supposed to, because the university could not meet its payroll. The staff will become eligible this week for first compensation checks, up to a maximum of $95 a week. Several found the registration disheartening.

Nathan Stoller, a professor of education at Hunter College, said the young man in front of him in the line had run into a problem. Although he taught at Baruch College, he was also enrolled in a graduate class, and therefore deemed possibly ineligible for unemployment pay because he was a student. His class, of course, was suspended.

"I'm concerned for my students," Professor Stoll said. "I marked their exams, but it closed before I could get my grades in. In 1970, the students occupied the university. Where are they now?"

"It's very demoralizing, because the college year has a rhythm, and nobody knows what's going to happen," he continued. "We're like pins in a bowling alley. My own reading is that Mayor Beame ordered Kibbee to close to bounce it off on the Legislature, and avoid the onus. They're throwing it around."

Dr. Robert J. Kibbee is the chancellor of the university. Bitterness at the politicians was a constant theme. Teachers observed that the city was saving $6 million a week while the university remained closed, but would lose about half of that in state matching funds. In addition, they said, the government would have to pay about $2 million a week in unemployment pay, and might eventually have to extend the school year to make up the lost time.

omy, but some sort of collusion," said Robert A. Greenberg, a professor of English at Queens College.

"Our union had an agreement to defer 25 percent of our income until 1978," he said. "That seemed all right—at least we would get some money. But even if we get paid at the end of June, it will be three-quarters of one month's pay, for two months."

Professor Greenberg said his unemployment compensation would not meet the maintenance charge on his cooperative apartment.

"With the students," he added, "it's worse—the bitter taste, the demoralization, the cynicism this creates. Day by day, it was unclear whether there would be school. They were treated like Yo-Yos on a string."

Like others, he deplored the stress in some public comments on the relatively high salaries paid at City University. He pointed out that instructors started at $12,000, and that many administrative employees were modestly paid.

Emil Moll, a stationary engineer working at City College, blamed the Legislature. "They've been hemming and hawing and now they've taken a three-day vacation," he said. "All the unions should start a campaign to oust their legislators."

CREDIT MARKETS TURN OPTIMISTIC

Money Supply, Wholesale Prices Among Factors

By JOHN H. ALLAN

The credit markets, impressed with the recent slowdown in money supply growth and the less worrisome wholesale price figures that were released last Friday, are in a much more optimistic frame of mind than they were before Memorial Day. Last week's trend toward higher fixed-income prices and lower interest rates is expected to continue.

"Market psychology has changed," said Siesel E. Cane, Jr., of John Nuvreen & Company, expressing a view that seemed to dominate the analysis of credit market experts last week.

According to Mr. Canaday, who was writing about the tax-exempt securities market, attitudes of market makers have shifted "from negative to positive" for three reasons: the decline in the nation's narrowly defined money supply over the last two weeks, "wide-spread agreement" that long-term rates could once again begin declining and the lighter volume of tax-exempt issues for sale this month.

Corporate bond volume in June, however, is expected to total almost $2.8 billion, a large total. But even this prospect of an active schedule of corporate bond sales over the next several weeks—including some $820 million this week—is not currently viewed with any dread by bond dealers. Increasingly, dealers assert that active new-issue volume often helps sustain a trend toward lower interest rates as large key issues focus the market's attention and motivate money managers.

According to the Money Market Report of the Chase Manhattan Bank, the Federal Reserve "would be justified" in maintaining its stable monetary posture "for several more weeks and perhaps longer."

The Chase also mentioned several other "favorable market fundamentals." The Treasury, it said, has "very light cash needs," there is an "attractive" spread between dealers' money costs and market yields, and there is no evidence yet that last week's big jump in commercial loans at New York City banks is the beginning of any sustained increase.

On Friday the Federal Government reported that the Wholesale Price Index rose at a 3.6 percent annual rate in May, sharply less than the 9.6 percent rate in April that had raised fears of renewed double-digit inflation. May's lower rate was cited as a major positive factor for a continuation

got under way on Friday, May 28, after a prolonged slide that began six weeks earlier on April 22.

Last Thursday the Federal Reserve Board reported that the narrow money supply (M-1, or currency plus most checking accounts balances) averaged $308.1 billion in the week ended May 26, unchanged from the preceding week and down $1.5 billion from the week ended May 12.

As Alan C. Derner of the Bankers Trust Company noted Friday, the four-week average growth of M-1 has slowed from a 19 percent annual rate in mid-May to 6 percent. "This is certainly constructive," he declared.

While these positive influences appeared to dominate the credit markets late last week, there were also less favorable factors to consider.

Citibank and several other major banks raised their prime rates. The money supply frequently increases sharply in June on a seasonal basis. The long-term outlook makes it still seem likely that economic expansion will cause both the demand for credit and the rate of inflation to rise somewhat. At the moment, however, it appears that spring is ending on a much more cheerful note for the credit markets. Against this background $820 million of corporate bonds and $700 million of tax-exempt notes and bonds are scheduled for sale this week.

Other follow-up news from the money market includes: The Federal Reserve Board's report that the narrow money supply (M-1, or currency plus most checking accounts balances) averaged $308.1 billion in the week ended May 26, unchanged from the preceding week and down $1.5 billion from the week ended May 12. leaders' upstate constituency. "At least it will make it uncomfortable for them," one Democratic aide said. "When the teachers or the students or the unions come to us now, we send them to the Republicans because the ball is clearly in their corner. If a lot of pressure gets put on the seven City Republicans, it may convince Anderson to change his mind."

Matching-Fund Formula

Senator Anderson has objected specifically to the Democratic leaders' plan to repeal the 50-50 city-state matching-fund formula that has supported the City University's 10 senior colleges for more than a decade. The Democrats argue that the repeal is needed to prevent the state's contribution from shrinking in proportion with the city's as the city, under Mayor Beame's three-year fiscal recovery plan, withdraws its support for the four-year campuses.

Senator Anderson's spokesman, Richard Roth, also pointed out today that Governor Carey had yet to endorse the Democratic plan, suggesting that the Republicans should not expect to support a measure that has not yet been cleared by Mr. Carey and his fiscal advisers, let alone by the Democratically controlled Assembly.

Attempts to reach Mr. Carey's chief adviser on the City University issue, Robert Rogardo, director of State Operations, for comment on the Republican suggestion were fruitless today.

While Senator Anderson's outright opposition to major portions of the Democratic plan has served to shock some recalcitrant city Democratic Assemblymen into support of their leaders' plan, some Democrats expressed doubts today about the willingness of some of their upstate members to go along with it.

There will be party conferences tomorrow at which the Democratic leaders will take further soundings of their members' feelings on the controversial package.

Ewald Nyquist, State Education Commissioner, meanwhile, said today he would discuss the City University's closing before the end of its normal spring term with his counsel and other staff members tomorrow, to see if any action by the State Education Department was called for in the efforts to reopen the system.

In a statement, the Academy said the loss on sales of the securities was $417,000. It agreed on the income and dividend earnings, making the net loss $28,648. "While any loss is regrettable, many institutions were experiencing similar or greater losses," during those years, the academy said.

Audits by the Department of the Army released by Mr. Aspin in Washington last week, the management of the association's portfolio "ineffective." The auditors attributed the losses to "inattention" by management and to "ill-advised and sometimes unilateral decisions."

They also revealed separate, year-long disputes between the association and Merrill Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith, the stock brokers over heavy losses in mortgage securities.

The academy declined comment on the references in the audits to bad management. However, it said that the association had started selling its more speculative holdings in 1973 at less than the purchase price so that its portfolio "would no longer be subject to market fluctuation." The money has been converted to bonds, debentures, certificates of deposit and Government insured securities.

Each service academy has its own athletic association to handle intercollegiate sports. The money comes from ticket sales to football and basketball games, cadet fees, membership dues from servicemen and radio and television royalties. The associations, in turn, pay for equipment, maintenance and travel for the teams.

A Defense Department regulation prohibits the use of nonappropriated, nontaxpayer funds for investment in other than Government-backed securities.

Fire Ruins Fascist Rally

ROME, June 6 (Reuters)—Fire destroyed a Rome movie theater only hours before a neo-Fascist rally has to have been held there today.

It was the latest episode of the violence marring the approach in Italy's general election on June 20. Firemen suspected arson, saying the fire broke out at three points just after midnight.

The 5-cylinder Mercedes-Benz 300D. Another engineering milestone that has quietly inspired a change in traditional automotive design.

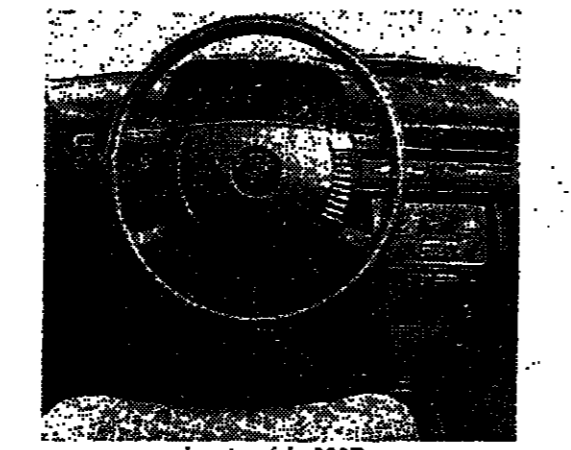

The Mercedes-Benz 300D has quietly changed the rules of the automobile game. This 5-cylinder Diesel automobile is an engineering milestone that offers a unique combination of performance, luxury, economy and quality.

In fact, the Mercedes-Benz 300D has inspired new thinking in automotive design. It is the most powerful, the most responsive and the swiftest Diesel passenger car ever sold.

For other manufacturers, a car with the myriad blessings of the 300D is somewhere far down the road. The 300D is here now. With it, Mercedes-Benz underscores its reputation for establishing new standards.

Unique in all the world

Four decades ago, Mercedes-Benz demonstrated the benefits of Diesel power. Now, the 5-cylinder engine in the 300D widely expands that list. It banishes forever the image of the Diesel as a rough, noisy workhorse. The 300D is indeed a thoroughbred.

Interior of the 300D. The world's most luxurious Diesel automobile.

Unlike any other make, the 300D takes advantage of precombustion chamber Diesel engine design. This development, pioneered by Mercedes-Benz, delivers a longer, smoother power pulse as well as more efficient combustion. The result: A combination of mileage and exhaust emission levels that no comparable gasoline-engine sedan can approach.

Of course, the exact mileage you get depends on how and where you drive, as well as the condition and equipment of your automobile. But according to estimates published by the Federal Environmental Protection Agency (highway driving: 28 mpg; city driving: 22 mpg), the 20.6-gallon fuel supply of the 300D should have no trouble letting it cruise 500 highway miles between fill-ups.

Even if all your driving were in town, your 300D should stop-and-go more than 400 miles on a single tank. Compare that to your present car.

No tune-ups—ever

When you do stop for fuel, a 300D offers several more pleasant surprises. First, Diesel fuel is usually cheaper than even regular gasoline. Countrywide, the difference averages 4¢-7¢ per gallon less. Second, Diesel fuel is plentiful. Thousands and thousands of stations sell it all across America. Third, since Diesel fuel has more energy per gallon than gasoline, every gallon not only costs you less, it takes you farther.

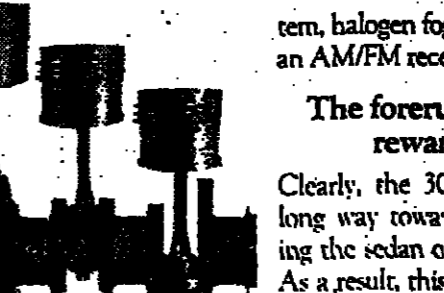

Another plus: With a 300D you can happily forget about that expensive automotive custom known as the conventional tune-up. Because it has no spark plugs, points, distributor, condenser or carburetor, the Mercedes-Benz 300D never needs one.

The complete sedan

When you compare it to most full-sized sedans, the 300D is a materials miser. It is not as big, not as heavy and not as thirsty. But it is every bit as practical and comfortable.

In fact, the 300D is a full 5-passenger sedan. Besides its generous interior, its trunk boasts a spacious 17.5 cubic feet of volume. On top of that, the 300D abounds with countless examples of innovative Mercedes-Benz safety engineering.

The 300D does lack one thing: A lengthy option list. The reason is its complete array of standard equipment. Included are: Power-assisted steering and brakes, automatic transmission, air conditioning, electric windows, cruise control, central locking system, halogen fog lamps, an AM/FM receiver.

The foreigner's reward

Clearly, the 300D long way toward the sedan of the future. As a result, this will doubtless be in a final key value. Over the years Mercedes automobiles have held their value better than any other make of luxury car sold in America. It is a son that the 300D will be no exception. An automobile which is years ahead today is a sound asset while the others are trying to catch up tomorrow.

It all fits: A pair of skis, a pair of ski boots, a 24" bicycle and two suitcases.

The incomparable Mercedes-Benz sedan. An engineering triumph that offers the entire automotive world—a look into an automobile whose combination of performance, economy, luxury and innovation has advanced passenger car design a giant step.

Mercedes-Benz

Engineered like no other car in the world.

What the passenger car should be coming to: The incomparable Mercedes-Benz 300D.

Search for Synthetic Fuels Delayed

By EDWARD COWAN

WASHINGTON, June 6—Two years after an Arab oil embargo focused national attention on "energy independence," efforts to create a synthetic-fuel industry based on the country's huge reserves of coal and shale remain bogged down by controversy and uncertainty.

Everything takes longer than expected. The subsidy legislation rejected by the House of Representatives in December re-emerged from the Science Committee in modified form only two weeks ago. A significant number of liberals and conservatives still oppose it.

President Ford's January 1975 target of a million barrels a day of synthetic fuels by 1985 is plainly out of the question. Indeed, it is uncertain that the more recent and modest target of 350,000 barrels a day by 1982-83 can be realized.

There have been other disappointments. There is no hope that Congress will adopt Mr. Ford's January 1975 recommendation, since quietly dropped, for a price floor under imported oil to protect high-cost synthetic fuels from foreign competition. Any price protection will have to come from Government commitments to particular projects, a more politically hazardous route.

The Energy Research and Development Administration has dropped outright its goal of regular commercial production of oil from coal by 1985. It has cut in half its goal for gas from coal.

However, on the plus side, the agency expects to award by June 30 one or more cost-sharing contracts to design high-energy coal gasification plants. These facilities, to cost about $800 million each, would convert coal into pipeline-quality gas.

Five industrial groups have responded to an agency request for proposals for the demonstration program. They are the Conoco Coal Development Company of Stamford, Conn., a subsidiary of the Continental Oil Company that is representing a consortium of nine companies; the Illinois Coal Gasification Group of Chicago, organized by five Illinois gas utilities; the Ken-Tex Energy Corporation of Owensboro, Ky., a joint venture of the Texas Gas Transmission Company and the State of Kentucky; the Wheelabrator-Frye Corporation of Birmingham, Ala., and the Wyoalgas Group of New York, headed by Texaco Inc.

These plants would be far larger than the research plants that have been operated by the Institute of Gas Technology in Chicago, and by Conoco Coal Development at Rapid City, S.D.

In the face of delays, setbacks and uncertainties, plus opposition from some environmentalists—but not from the residents near prospective shale projects, according to Federal officials and oilmen—synthetic-fuel advocates muster a dogged optimism. They seem to believe that the recovery of oil and gas from coal and the gray rock known as shale will—must—come about, in staggering quantities, because the resources are there.

"The resource of oil shale in Colorado, Utah and Wyoming with some 600 billion recoverable barrels, is too large to ignore," says Walter T. Herget, president of the Rio Blanco Oil Shale Project, a joint venture of the Gulf Oil Corporation and the

SECURITIES PANEL FOR PLAN TO TEST ELECTRONIC SETUP

S.I.A. Group Backs Tryout of System That Would Do Some Specialist Work

By MICHAEL C. JENSEN

A special committee of the Securities Industry Association, a trade group representing securities firms, has endorsed a pilot program to test a controversial electronic system on the nation's securities markets, according to Wall Street sources.

The system, called the consolidated limit order book system, would take over some of the major functions now handled by specialists on the stock exchanges. The test would be conducted on a limited basis, including only a selected number of securities.

Such a system is regarded by some securities industry leaders as important in the implementation of a central market system, as called for in legislation passed by Congress last year.

The committee, which has submitted its report to the full trade group for approval, also called for creation of an "association" to oversee the pilot program and subsequent developments.

21-Member Group

It said the association, a 21-member group with five members coming from the New York Stock Exchange, might assume additional duties in the test of electronic handling of securities orders proved successful.

Such a system would take over the handling of "limit orders" orders to buy or sell securities when they reached a specific price level. Such orders are currently handled by specialists on the floors of the various exchanges and by market makers in off-exchange transactions. Additionally, the electronic system would be a major step in the linking together of all securities trading.

At least one key member of the Big Board panel has said, however, that no objection would be raised to the proposed pilot program endorsed by the S.I.A. committee.

A Broader Range

While there is considerable overlap in membership in the S.I.A. and the New York Stock Exchange, the S.I.A. has a broader range of members, including many who are not active on the exchanges.

The S.I.A.'s board of directors is scheduled to meet Thursday and is said to be prepared to approve the report of its committee, which is headed by Gustave L. Levy, senior partner of Goldman Sachs & Company.

Attempts to reach Mr. Levy yesterday to comment on the contents of the report were unsuccessful. An S.I.A. spokesman declined to comment.

One section of the committee report that is expected to arouse considerable controversy is the configuration of the "association" that would oversee the pilot program on limit orders.

Wall Street sources said that, while the so-called association was not intended to supersede the self-regulatory authority of the various exchanges, at least initially, such a role might evolve eventually.

Therefore, the makeup of the U.S.-Based Concerns Reduce Loss Caused by Pound's Fall

By STEVEN KATTNER

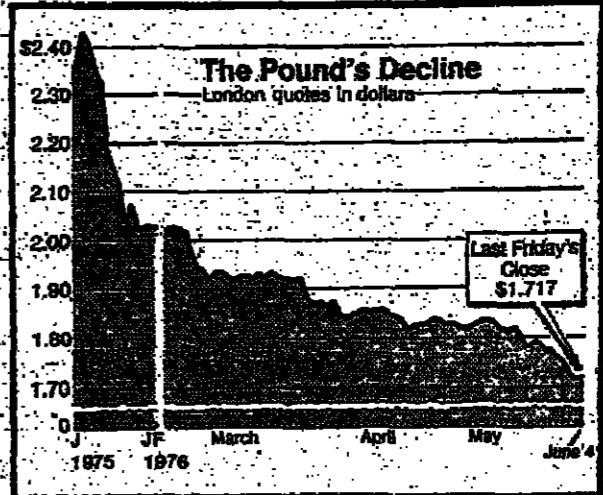

Multinational companies based in the United States, faced by an unending decline in the value of the British pound, have been seeking every means available to minimize their vulnerability to its continuing plunge, according to foreign-exchange dealers in New York.

Despite these protective measures, which were under way long before the pound's precipitous fall from $2.02 in early March to $1.71 now, American corporations with British subsidiaries still face substantial losses as a result of sterling's deterioration, which accelerated last week.

The reason is that the British subsidiaries earn their profits in sterling. When this money is sent to the United States and converted into dollars to be included in the financial statement of the American parent company, the net income that is reported will be substantially reduced by the depreciating value of the pound.

"My impression is that any American company with any sterling exposure in Britain hedged as it became clear that sterling was coming down," said one New York foreign exchange expert. By hedging, he was referring to the strategy of protecting against currency fluctuations.

The Pound's Decline London quotes in dollars

variety of ways to cut losses. One way is to participate in what is called the forward market. In this market, American parent companies (along with many others) sell sterling for delivery in the future—usually 90 days.

If sterling falls below the forward price (currently $1.59) over the three-month period, the corporation still has a contract to convert its pounds into dollars at the agreed-upon price. Thus, companies can determine their exchange rates at any given time and protect against a further decline in the pound.

LOS ANGELES, June 6—A long-running trial regarding alleged fraud by Capitol Records and its British parent company, EMI Ltd., is nearing an end here amid concern by the government and investors that preliminary ruling in the case is already in effect, given testimony to a form of manipulation of financial results. In a shareholders' class-action lawsuit, the companies have been accused of stock fraud in 1969 and 1970 through variety of means, including using reserve account funds to inflate sales and profit artificially to deceive stockholders at a time when Capitol was in difficulty.

Internal Accounts

Several court documents shed unusual light on the times Byzantine, potent-profit-laden world of music recording. They show a company that hid its profits by association with Beatles began to founder as British rock group broke and then unsuccessfully millions into developing musical groups that did catch on with the public. The case has also raised some lamental questions about a corporation can or cannot do in adjusting its internal units to show profitability, what it must tell the public at such adjustments.

The price of Capitol Industries' EMI stock on the American Exchange soared from a share in June 1969 to the following November, started to fall as word spread that the company's prospects were less than its earnings indicated. The stock was in August 1970 and $6 later.

Final Two Weeks

Jo Catena, a former Capitol marketing vice president and scores of institutional investors such as the Bank of America and Syracuse University, joined in the suit against Capitol and several other former officers.

Shareholders contend that Capitol suffered a collective loss of more than $20 million because they had bought the stock at inflated prices and had sold them at a loss. They also contend that if losses had been shared, they would have exceeded $40 million. The companies' executives have denied the allegations of impropriety, which

Large Manufacturers Cut Plans for Capital Outlays

By HERBERT KOSHEITZ

The country's 1,000 largest manufacturers have appropriated an estimated $11.1 billion for capital improvement in the first quarter of 1976, the Conference Board said over the weekend.

The first quarter set-asides, the board said, were down 12 percent from the fourth quarter of 1975 and down 2.8 percent from the first quarter of 1975. This year's first-quarter decline was almost entirely a result of cutbacks in the petroleum industry, which had lowered its appropriations by 35 percent. Excluding petroleum, which now accounts for nearly 25 percent of all manufacturing appropriations, the first-quarter appropriations fell only 1.3 percent from the fourth-quarter level.

Capital appropriations are authorized to spend money in the future, they are different from capital expenditures, which are the actual outlays for new plant and equipment. Manufacturers account for about 40 to 45 percent of total spending.

"These latest data," said Elliott Grossman, Conference Board economist, "do not represent a downward trend in appropriations but only a delay in their continued growth. Actual capital spending continues on a high plateau. Actual capital spending, in fact, declined much less during the 1973-75 recession than during past recessions."

Based on a continued growth of profits in a climate of accommodative monetary policy and a moderate rate of inflation, the Conference Board predicts that capital appropriations will reach a total of $51.3 billion in 1976, a 12 percent gain over 1975. Actual capital spending by manufacturers in 1976 is projected at $47.3 billion, a gain of 4 percent over the 1975 level.

An S.E.C. Inquiry On Grant Affairs Seems Under Way

By ISADORE BARMASH

The Securities and Exchange Commission is conducting an informal investigation of the financial affairs and information disclosures of the W. T. Grant Company, the 70-year-old retail chain that was adjudged bankrupt and liquidated last year. Sources disclosed this weekend.

S.E.C. sources in New York and Washington said they could neither confirm nor deny the reports of an investigation. The agency has a policy of declining to comment on any questions about ongoing investigations, they said.

However, financial sources in New York indicated that the S.E.C. was conducting an informal inquiry in an effort to determine if a formal investigation should be made, with broad subpoena powers. One of the principal goals of the in-

South Korea, With Debt Crisis Easing, Seeks to Build Momentum of Economy

By RICHARD HALLORAN

SEOUL, South Korea—Signs of relief are being heard in Government economic agencies, foreign banks and the American Embassy here as economists contend that the South Korean economy has escaped a grave financial crisis.

There were serious concerns here and abroad last year over Korea's mounting external debts. There was little worry about the potential for economic growth here, but considerable anxiety over Korea's ability to pay for it since so much must be financed by foreign-exchange earnings and capital inflows.

"They had a tight time of it last year, but they've pulled themselves out," said Philip D. Shetman, vice president of Citibank here and current head of the Foreign Bankers Association. "The Korean economy is doing very well, but continued vigilance is the policy."

Some Western economists here expressed optimism bordering on the euphoric.

The American Embassy, in a recent report, said: "Propelled by an exceptional rebound in export demand, the Korean economy is strongly recovering from the combined effects of the oil crisis and subsequent international recession."

"The strength of the current export surge should permit substantial improvement in Korea's balance of payments and inflation performance in 1976, as well as generate further growth of more than 8 percent."

Suh Suk Joon, an assistant minister of the Economic Planning Board, Korea's top Government economic agency, said the growth rate might even go higher than 9 percent. "Our export performance in the first four months was much better than we expected," he added.

Even so, there are words of caution. The Korea Herald, the Government's English-language newspaper, said in a recent editorial that the important question is how to sustain the momentum of this healthy trade in the face of uncertain external economic factors.

A Number of It's

Similarly, the Korea Times, which, although a private newspaper, dissects Government thinking, said: "There are many reasons to be cautious, as the nation's economy is closely related to those of other countries. Our economic structure is not yet as strong as we would like to believe."

The continued progress of the Korean economy this year, the newspapers and other observers have said, depends on a number of "ifs." Among them: "If the price of oil does not go up and raise import costs, if the prices of other raw materials stay within reason, if exports (especially of textiles) keep going up, if economic recovery in the United States and Japan continues to provide expanding markets, if export prices can be firmed but kept competitive despite do-

Women's Economic Role Lags in Developing Countries

Participants in Conference at Wellesley Suggest Ways to Equalize Status

By ANN CRITTENDEN

WELLESLEY, Mass.—The recent introduction of mechanical rice hullers in Java has increased productivity and provided new work in the rice mills for men, but it has eliminated hundreds of thousands of jobs—and an important source of income—for village women, who previously pounded the rice crops by hand.

Agricultural personnel in Kenya were puzzled when, after the establishment of co-operatives in pyrethrum growing areas, output sharply dropped. It was discovered that payment for production was made to men, although women had traditionally cultivated the crops of this flowering plant, used for insecticides. They simply stopped working when they saw that the cash benefits were going to the men.

The arrival of highly-capitalized coffee growing in the mountains of southern Mexico drew women as well as men into the wage market. Since the work is seasonal and the women's traditional tasks at home were not reduced, the women's working time in a harvest period has risen to 18 or 20 hours a day.

for expertise in this fast-growing area. Hannah Papanek, associate professor of sociology from Boston University, said, "One point of this conference is to show that there is a lot of good work in this field and that the issue isn't going to go away, so that policy planners can't say anymore, 'We'd like to help women, but we don't know how.' There's no data and no qualified women to consult."

The pioneering work on the effects of economic development on women was done by Ester Boserup, a Danish economist, some six years ago. More recent work has been done by Elise Boulding of the University of Colorado.

In brief, the thesis is that

Personal Finance: Minority Trusts and Ta

By LEONARD SLOANE

How can a person transfer money or property to a minor and minimize his taxes at the same time?

One method recommended by many lawyers and accountants is establishment of a minority trust. In contrast to a so-called "open trust"—bank accounts set up without a formal trust agreement—minority trusts have wide application and many advantages for parents and grandparents who create them.

A trust is a means by which a donor gives title to certain assets to a trustee, who holds it for the benefit of another. Such trusts are often established for the benefit of minors as a means of saving money for their college expenses.

A minority trust is a convenient method for those who wish to make a gift to a minor but do not want the minor to have control of the principal and income immediately. Moreover, in most instances, it allows the donor to obtain his annual exclusion from gift taxes of up to $3,000—for a married couple $3,000—when he contributes to the trust, as long as another person is appointed as trustee.

This exclusion is permitted because the Internal Revenue Code states that if, allowable when the assets given as a gift involve a "present interest" rather than an interest that will not be received until the future. Section 2503(c) of the code provides, in effect, that a gift in trust for a minor involves a present interest if the principal and income can be spent by the trustee for the beneficiary's benefit before he reaches 21.

The trust document can be made quite flexible to fit the needs of the donor and beneficiary. For example, as a result of Revenue Ruling 74-43, the trust need not end at age 21 if the beneficiary makes no such demand. But it can remain in effect, at the option of the donor, at least until the beneficiary is 21—despite the fact that the age of majority has been changed in many states, including New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, to 18.

can give the donor the right to name only the trustee, but also the successor trustee—individuals or institutions—if the original trustee becomes unable to serve. This can be done without court appointment, as is required in custodian accounts or guardianships.

The advantage of the trust is that, although the beneficiary is not necessarily entitled to anything prior to attaining age 21, the trustee is free to operate within the powers given him by applicable law and the trust instrument, which may be quite broad and permit him to use trust assets to pay educational and other expenses," said Ralph M. Engel of the law firm of Burns & Jacoby.

"Until his final accounting, which need not involve a court at all, a trustee is not necessarily under anyone's supervision as to the manner in which he handles the funds. Naturally this does not give him the license to embezzle funds or to violate the terms of the trust."

Obviously, because of this power held by the trustee, the donor should have full

Demand Lifts Cotton Prices

By H. J. MAIDENBERG

Industry is sharp rise in raw fiber that a record $1.10 a pound, lifting the Civil War futures to 76 cents, the highest since 1973. The strength, 1976 futures fell on the New Exchange—the remaining cotton market—posted a high last week of 71.35 cents, a broker said that the bears expect the price to rise to 88-cent level by the end of the year. Demand situation is a factor that the bears expect the price to rise to 88-cent level by the end of the year.

million bales (of 480 pounds each) that the Agriculture Department has forecast earlier. In fact, the bullish government estimates of output discouraged inventory building to some extent. In 1974, domestic cotton output was nearly 12 million bales, while usage and exports totaled roughly 9.5 million bales. The oversupply discouraged farmers the following year, and they produced about 8.3 million bales, while usage and exports rose to 10 million. On average, the United States exports a third of its cotton, mostly to Japan and Europe, about a third is used in making unbleached cloth, and the rest is blended with synthetic fibers.

Earlier this spring, the Government's survey of growers indicated that output would be 10 million to 11.5 million bales. Planters were apparently encouraged by the pickup in demand. Last week reports from the Delta and East Texas indicated that cotton planters were preparing to switch to soybeans, a crop that may be sown as late as July, that requires less fertilizers than cotton and that is comparable in earnings to farmers. "If they haven't got their cotton in by now," a mill official said in New York last week, "they're foolish not to swing into soybeans. With beans for delivery in November selling at $6 a bushel, the crop is equivalent to 60-cent cotton, on an acre-for-acre basis."

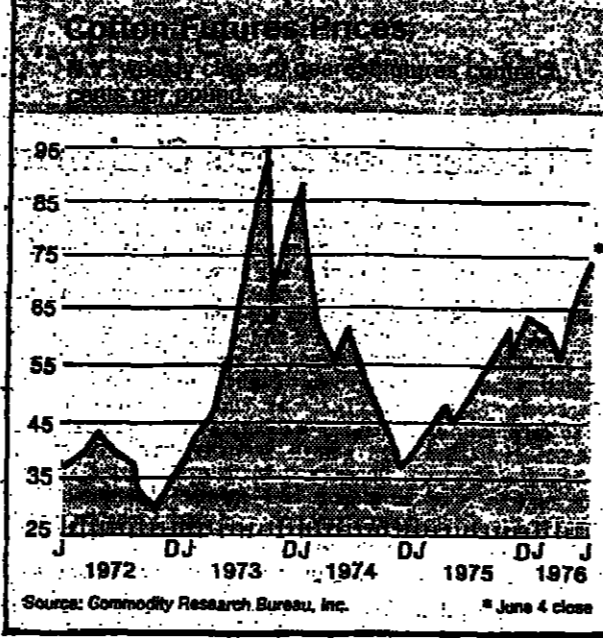

But several brokers thought otherwise, and as one explained: "With cotton moving well above 60 cents, much higher, planters will take the gamble and stick with cotton."

As for the talk about breaking the price record set during the Civil War, traders on the New York Cotton Exchange gave three principal explanations for the impending rise: First, it is expected that there will be only 3 million bales of cotton on the market in the nation when the current crop year ends on July 31. If so, it would be the lowest carryover since the Civil War. The carryover on July 31, 1975, was also low—4 million bales.

Secondly, the Soviet Union, an important cotton producer and the second largest producer of cotton goods, has reportedly been shopping for supplies. The trade believes the Soviet Union in 1975 probably had a shortfall in cotton along with the more publicized grain disaster.

Finally, the worldwide recession has apparently not curtailed cotton usage, as had been expected. Cargill Investor Services reported May 14 that cotton usage globally in the 1976-77 season is expected to reach 62 million bales, compared with 56 million the preceding crop year.

In sum, the usually quiet cotton futures market has suddenly come alive.

Role of Women Lagging In the Developing Nations

colonial administrators and later Western aid officials encouraged the economic changes that either displaced women from the traditional occupations (which had provided them with status and income) or placed additional burdens on them as men moved into cash-crop or urban jobs and no longer helped with subsistence work.

For example, development authorities in the agricultural sector have often excluded women farmers from land reform programs, from instruction in modern agricultural methods and from access to credit.

According to a paper by Ann Seidman, an economist from Wellesley College, and Achola Pais of Harvard University, these were significant factors "contributing to the systematic neglect of food crops which have been, in part, responsible for the widespread famine characteristic of large areas of Africa in recent years."

To prevent such mistakes in the future, a number of conference participants urged the formation of data-gathering centers in developing countries of the third world and the evaluation of development plans in terms of their impact on the situation of women.

Such evaluation has been a requirement of all American aid programs for two years, but conference participants indicated that few countries of the third world currently place a high priority on women's economic participation.

On the contrary, according to Ingrid Palmer of the International Labor Organization, women's economic role is so low among governments of less-developed nations that at a recent I.L.O. conference (on the division of labor under any redistribution of wealth between the rich nations and the poor) no mention was made of the sexual division of labor.

"It was clear," she declared, "that any goodies coming from the new economic order would go to male wage employment." Dr. Palmer and Dr. Boserup, among others, said the greatest danger for poor women at the moment is that, with 20 to 30 percent male unemployment in many cities of developing countries, whatever new jobs are created will go to out-of-work men.

Firehouse Magazine Is Planned

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

Did you ever know any firemen, even volunteer firemen? Dedicated, loyal and involved people generally, aren't they?

Well, those also happen to be the qualities in readers that publishers and their advertisers are looking for. Now an unlikely pair—Fireman Dennis Smith of Ladder Company 61 and Bartle Bull of the Social Register Bulls—have joined forces to put out a magazine that will put those wonderful qualities to work.

Firehouse magazine will be a monthly consumer magazine for firefighters and their families (and buffs), and early indications are that it has already struck a responsive chord.

Mr. Bull, its publisher, is former publisher and president of The Village Voice. He is prepared to show documentation that the response rate to a test subscription mailing was phenomenal as was another mailing to determine the demographics of subscribers.

In an interview the other day, after having studied the market for two months, Mr. Bull said that Firehouse is in the ideal position of having no competition, a defined audience and a dedicated constituency.

Mr. Smith is the very same Mr. Smith who wrote the briskly selling book "Report From Engine Company 82," his second book, "The Final Fire," is due out in September.

At the same interview, fresh from a night of fighting fires in the South Bronx, 36-year-old Mr. Smith talked about the creation of the magazine. He said:

"There's nothing decent to read about the business. Just technical magazines. After I wrote the book I realized that I had created a voice and I needed a publication. But I didn't know anything about publishing. I needed a publisher."

A mutual friend brought together the erudite fireman of Irish immigrant stock and the Harvard-trained lawyer whose father in Britain had been a Member of Parliament.

About $500,000 has been raised to launch the magazine. An office has been established at 4 West 57th Street.

There is no such thing as a national list of firemen, so 29,000 fire chiefs were asked for the names and home addresses of their men. All 11 percent response brought in 280,000 names, which have already been fed to a buggy computer.

A test mailing of 40,000

Ad Federation Elects Chairman

At the beginning of its annual convention yesterday, the American Advertising Federation, meeting in Washington, elected James S. Fish chairman for the year beginning July 1. Mr. Fish, a nifty dancer and super golfer well-known in advertiser circles, is vice president-consumer communications and marketing services for General Mills.

He is an industry activist and will be the first person in advertising history to head the largest industry organization twice. In 1959-60 he was chairman of the Advertising Federation of America. (That was before the name change.) Raymond J. Petrasen, executive vice president of Hearst Magazine, was named secretary-treasurer of the federation. Its new board will include Herbert G. Klein, Metromedia vice president and former communications chief in the Nixon Administration, and Don Johnston, president of J. Walter Thompson.

charter subscription offers on Dec. 30 got a 19 percent response and was, according to Walter Weitz, the fastest and biggest return he has ever seen in his 30 years in direct marketing and circulation promotion. There are already 6,000 paid subscribers at $8.95 each.

Mr. Smith had with him a dummy of the first issue, with its cover featuring a lithograph of an 1880 firefighter in action. It has an article on the worst fire in the history of North America and one called "Today's Firehouse, Where the Community Action Is." And there are the beginnings of such regular features as Fire Politics, Fire Medicine and Firehouse Gourmet.

The first issue also has a message from the editor, in it Mr. Smith declares, "We are not like other people." The magazine, which will have a large-scale subscription mailing next month, expects to have an initial circulation of 50,000. It will have a Christmas issue and then will go monthly in January.

The charter issue, although budgeted for 10 pages of advertising, already has 21 pages, and the closing date isn't until July 15. A black-and-white page goes for $880, with a $500 additional charge for four-color.

So much for today's hot idea. At Last, a Foley Book. Although he has spent a lifetime writing—news stories, ad copy and magazine articles—Paul Foley, president of the Interpublic Group of Companies, has never had a book published. That gap will be filled on July 1 when Rizzoli brings out "Fresh Views of the American Revolution." In this book Mr. Foley supplies the text accompanying new works of Oscar De Mejo, a painter of the primitive school.

This all came to pass as the result of Mr. Foley's commissioning the artist to do 12 works based on Revolutionary War themes on the off chance that one of his many advertising clients would "come up empty" for the Bicentennial celebration. None did.

Certain museums learned of the works, however, and asked to show them. Mr. Foley, who is an art collector, a lover of horses and a history buff, supplied captions. These have evolved into a full-fledged text.

The soft-cover version will sell for $9.95. The hard-cover will be packaged along with a signed, numbered lithograph of one of the paintings, will go for $125.

ance sheet and protect an open currency position incurred in the normal course of business, but we don't speculate," Mr. Wells said.

Another way of mitigating the sterling problem is for the British subsidiary to convert its pounds into dollars or other hard currencies, such as the West German mark or Swiss franc, as quickly as possible. Although Britain has strict foreign-exchange rules, companies have found some elasticity.

Imports, which are often payable in dollars, are accounted for as quickly as possible. Dividends to the parent company are paid rapidly, even if it means borrowing. Similarly, the companies avoid converting currencies made in foreign currencies into sterling for as long as possible.

These early and late payments are known in the trade as "leads" and "lags."

ways, which collects pounds in Britain, now sends them to New York every day. "We're getting rid of our excess sterling as quickly as we can," a spokesman said. "We're only keeping what we need to do business."

Furthermore, British subsidiaries try to maximize borrowings that are repayable in pounds. With Britain's double-digit inflation rate, combined with the depreciation of the pound, being a debtor can even become profitable.

Because protective measures were begun years ago, when many corporations realized that the sun was going to set on the British pound as a strong currency, the recent events have not sent them scrambling to their exchange brokers.

"Almost any company at this stage of the game would not have sterling balances," said another foreign-exchange executive. Like his colleagues, he declined to be identified. "I've been talking to dealers who say that doing one dollar in pounds a week is difficult," he said. "This is almost unheard of."

This dealer, and most others, say that a market still exists in New York for sellers of pounds—although only in small amounts. The dealers believe that pound sellers these days are largely foreign countries and banks outside of Europe.

British subsidiaries still have to do business in pounds, and their ability to eliminate the adverse effects of the decline in sterling are necessarily limited.

While Exxon U.S.A. only keeps trivial sterling balances, Esso Petroleum Ltd. (the British affiliate) can't do much to get out of sterling," commented Peter Moyer, assistant treasurer of the Exxon Corporation.

Although dividends of Esso Petroleum remained essentially steady from 1974 to 1975 at $7.5 million, the sharp drop in the pound's value meant a drop in the dividends as they appeared in dollars on Exxon's books.

Like many other British subsidiaries, Esso Petroleum is doubly affected because it must import crude oil into England. Since this crude is bought with dollars converted from sterling, it is becoming more expensive daily.

Aside from these real effects, changes in currency values, companies also face disturbing accounting ramifications. The major problem is that, because of a recent accounting ruling, changes in the value of certain items held in foreign currencies—primarily debt—must be reflected in profits. Therefore, when sterling falls, the size of Esso Petroleum's sterling loan obligations as expressed in dollars also falls and the company must report the drop as an extraordinary profit (although no taxes are due) even though no gain was realized.

committee would become critical. The S.I.A. committee's proposal calls for five members to be drawn from the ranks of the S.I.A., five from the Big Board, three public members, two from the American Stock Exchange, two from the National Association of Securities Dealers, and one each from four regional exchanges.

Sources said the S.I.A. committee had not concluded that an electronic handling of limit orders was necessarily workable or cost-effective, but had urged that the pilot program be initiated promptly, with a resolution of the matter by the end of the year.

If you are a reader of—or advertiser in—Time, People, Sports Illustrated, Fortune or Money magazine, their editorial and production staffs urge you to consider the impact that our current strike against Time Inc. will have on these publications.

All of you have come to expect Time Inc.'s magazines to be of the highest quality both in content and appearance. Now the company is without the talents of most of its best writers, correspondents, researchers, copyreaders, artists and all the others who got the publications to press swiftly but carefully.

Stories in the magazines that appear this week have been "in the house" for weeks. But what of the weeks to come?

Our proposals are modest: a guaranteed cost-of-living increase, for instance, that would give us back in real wages what we have already lost to inflation.

Help support us—so we can get back to work and give you that quality once again.

TIME Z

TIME over the years has introduced 300 different ways to make the magazine more flexible, more efficient, and more directly suited to a specific need. The two newest:

TIME T. The only magazine edition in America that goes exclusively to selected subscribers who have identified themselves as members of top management. And with a circulation of 300,000, TIME T reaches more of top management than do Forbes, Business Week, Fortune or Newsweek E. Its black & white page rate of $6,990 is considerably lower than any of theirs.

TIME Z. The biggest ultra-selective medium in America. It goes to 1.2 million TIME subscribers (average household income: $27,000) living in 1,414 of the nation's most affluent ZIP Code areas. The cost of a black & white page is only $14,830, which means that a 13-time schedule in TIME Z comes in for less than $200,000.

These new editions underscore both the desire and the capability of TIME to give advertisers target marketing opportunities unmatched by any other magazine. TIME. Where innovation is nothing new.

"I think I've got a feeling for the texture of the city. I've always had a problem about leaving it because it's my subject matter, I'm not an abstractionist, who can work out in East Hampton in the summertime."

What's on display at the gallery is only the beginning, covering the harbor, the Financial District, a suggestion of Chinatown, the F.R.T. subway station at 14th Street, a Times Square scene and two heroic tourist figures shown against the Prometheus fountain in Rockefeller Plaza. Eventually, he said, he will include all of Manhattan and beyond.

In planning his work, he went on, he and his associates have made hundreds of drawings and photographs of the sites he was thinking about, including in his master plan.

"I'd get on the subway and get off way out in Brooklyn somewhere," he said. "That man in the subway car sticking his tongue out, frightening the little girl, was something I actually saw. People say there are too many crazy people in 'Ruckus Manhat-tan.' From what I've seen, you can't exaggerate that."

City Warns Against Shift Of U.S. Westway Funds

By EDWARD C. BURKS

The Beame administration (be eligible for 90 percent Federal financing. The state would provoke the wrath of the Federal Government if the city now tried to "trade in" Federal money for an Interstate highway on the West Side so as to take Federal mass transit aid instead.

It was the latest response from City Hall to community and environmental critics who have sued to force the city and state to drop their Interstate highway plan and instead make transit improvements.

First Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti said that the city would "lose all credibility" with the Federal Transportation Secretary, William T. Coleman, if, after years of planning for the Interstate, it switched to a transit alternative.

He noted that the city-state group drawing plans for the six-lane Interstate, the so-called Westway project, had worked closely with the Federal Highway Administration. Both Mayor Beame and Governor Carey have given Mr. Coleman written assurances of their determination to go ahead with Westway.

Filing in Summer Sought
The plan calls for building a six-lane highway partly in land-filled between the Battery and 42d Street, to replace the elevated West Side Highway. Its cost is estimated at $1.3 billion, and if approved by the Federal Government, the highway would

Carey Rejects Cuomo Compromise Plan To End Strike by Co-op City Residents

Special to The New York Times
ALBANY, June 6—Governor Carey has not accepted the compromise fashioned by Mario M. Cuomo, the Secretary of State, and the residents' strike at Co-op City and has directed Mr. Cuomo to resume his negotiations "to try to get differences and adjustments" in it.

"The Governor has not accepted the proposal as it stands," one official in the Governor's office said of the Cuomo plan, which was formally given to Mr. Carey a few days ago. It would permit residents at the huge Bronx cooperative housing complex to establish their own levels of carrying charges if they promised not to increase the deficit in what they owe the state.

Co-op City residents have been withholding their carrying charges for a year out of protest against a 25 percent increase in the charges imposed by the state Housing Finance Agency.

Anxiety Mounts
As the residents' revolt has dragged on, Mr. Carey's fiscal Governor's office has become increasingly worried that their failure to achieve a solution would jeopardize the drive to rescue the Housing Finance Agency itself with the help of assistance from Washington.

The Governor's aides have made it clear that Mr. Carey is reluctant to accept any solution calling for less than full payments by residents—something that the Cuomo compromise would permit for another six months.

On the other hand, Mr. Cuomo defended his proposal by saying that it, at least, would bring about a return of some of the $27 million the state says it is owed, and that the ultimate goal was for all the money that is owed to be paid.

In an interview, Mr. Cuomo said Friday that the "general parameters" of his plan had been "neither accepted nor rejected" by the Governor, which meant that his effort now would be to "adjust specific parts" of his compromise.

In general, Mr. Cuomo said his proposal was "the best I can get" because he could not persuade residents to agree immediately to the payment of the higher carrying charges.

It will be partly cloudy and warm with a chance of scattered showers today throughout the New York Metropolitan area and southern New England. Showers and occasional thunderstorms are expected in southern Georgia and Florida and will extend into southeastern Texas and portions of northwestern Texas. Showers will remain over Montana and some scattered showers are forecast for the Pacific Northwest Coast. Warm or hot temperatures will be found from the lake region through the upper Mississippi Valley and into the Northern Plains States, while the Central Pacific States and the Pacific Northwest will be cool. Elsewhere, seasonal temperatures will be experienced.

Occasional light showers and mild temperatures occurred yesterday in the metropolitan area and southern New England, while sunny skies and warm temperatures prevailed in northern New England. An area of thunderstorms developed in Pennsylvania and spread to nearby states by afternoon. Scattered showers extended over the Northern Plains States and the upper Missouri Valley and were also reported from the south portions of the Central Plains States throughout the lower Mississippi Valley and into the western Gulf States and northern Texas.

stairs and downstairs," said Cheryl "but that doesn't count. Our heart just isn't in it. We just want to be all together again."

Cheryl, who was an honor student in Hicksville, said she was now failing in school.

"I hate seeing myself going down the drain after I worked so hard to become something," she said, "but I can't study. I can't concentrate."

Patricia, who had just become an honor student in Hicksville, said she, too, was not doing well in school.

The girls said they had planned to run away for a week because they saw no reasons to remain in West Islip and no point in submitting to "forced" visits with their natural mother in Long Beach.

"We usually go to see our sisters for only a half hour, although we were there three hours," Patricia said.

Cheryl, who spoke with a maturity beyond her 13 years, did most of the talking while Patricia, who said she felt relieved at their decision to run away, finished her soda and dived eagerly into a bowl of ice cream.

"I want to go home-period," Patricia said, referring to the Lotnans' home.

Foster Mother Defended
Cheryl said that she and her sisters were bitter over accusations by Miss Wallace's attorney that the Lotnans had turned the children against their natural mother.

"If mom said once, she said a thousand times," said Cheryl. "If at any time we wanted to go live with Miss Wallace, we were just to say the word."

Before they were placed with their foster mother and often went hungry, the four girls and their two younger brothers were placed in foster care after a baby-sitter called the police when their mother failed to return home.

"Before we were put in a foster home nobody cared about us," said Cheryl, who, as the oldest, was often left to tend her younger sisters and brothers. "But it was so different in Hicksville. Somebody cared for us. For the first time, we had a father."

"I didn't have to stay up at night worrying. I thought I'd become somebody important. I was glad I wasn't still in Long Beach, because I think if we had stayed, I would have ended up a bum."

The girls said that by running away they hoped to be taken seriously. Cheryl said: "We want to go back where we belong and live like normal people."

Breakfast and Free Rides On Upstate Festival Menu

By EDITH EVANS ASBURY
Special to The New York Times

DELHI, N.Y., June 6—Here in the heart of New York State's dairy country, 170 miles northwest of Manhattan, something new has been added to the traditional fund-raising church festival—free rides on land, water or air with your old-fashioned country breakfast.

The breakfast was traditional—all you could eat of country sausage, bacon, eggs, pancakes and pastry, prepared lovingly and expertly by church women and served by junior high school students.

If you paid $9 for the breakfast you could have a free airplane ride down the Delaware River Valley from Fitch's covered bridge to Walton, 15 miles away. If you preferred the American Indian way—a canoe ride at river level—you paid $5. For $3, you could have breakfast and ride behind horses or ponies in old-fashioned surreys or carts, or bounce on hay in an old farm wagon drawn by a tractor.

Picturesque Square
The weekend-long festival on the picturesque town square of Delhi, was held for the benefit of the white-columned New England Colonial-style church built on the edge of the square in 1837. Originally the church was known as the Second Presbyterian, but it recently formed an ecumenical union with the Methodist Church and is now called the United Ministry.

Along the rear of the square, in a row, are handsome red brick buildings housing the County Clerk's Office and the County Courthouse. Next to the courthouse stands the County Jail, close enough to the church for prayers to be heard both ways. An "eternal light" in memory of World War II dead burns in front of a group of marble figures memorializing those who died in the Civil War. Nearby is an old-fashioned round and roofed bandstand, and not far away is a plaque proclaiming that Charles Evans Hughes, later to be Supreme Court Justice of the United States, once taught at Delhi Academy. Facing another side of the square are the new one-that are the opposite of each other. One meaning refers to a measure that embodies a minor technical or procedural alteration in a law. But when a Democrat (or a Republican) gets up in one of the chambers to say, "this is just a little housekeeping bill," it's a signal to Republicans (or Democrats) to scrutinize the measure to make sure something of consequence isn't being slipped through by subterfuge.

Solterplate—A term for standard, technical language that any bill requires if it is to be properly drafted. But like "housekeeping bill," it's a term to watch out for.

One-House Bill—A phenomenon of a politically divided and grandstanding Legislature, in which the Democratic-controlled Assembly passes a bill it knows—and sometimes even hopes—is destined for defeat in the Republican-controlled Senate, and vice versa.

Spinach—A $5 fiscal expression, referring to projects in state construction agencies that nobody—the banks, the state pension funds, nobody—wanted to lend money to. The legislators didn't much like eating their spinach, either.

Up the Learning Curve—A Caray Administration special, this term gives a management and science cachet to the normal process of educating reluctant legislators and others on a particularly intricate issue, like the fiscal situation.

Working Day—This occurs when the Legislature is actually in session, logically enough.

Legislative Day—Not as logical a term. A legislative day occurs when the Legislature is not in session. Many

Problem of Unfit Teachers Stressed

By LEONARD BUDER
Special to The New York Times

KLAMETHA LAKE, N.Y., June 6—Greater efforts to rid the New York City school system of incompetence and unfit teachers were urged here today by Frank C. Arricale, 2d, the city system's executive director for personnel.

He said that during the current school year nearly 350 probationary teachers—those with less than three years of service—had lost their positions because of unsatisfactory performance, compared with the dismissal of about 60 teachers two years ago. But, he added, only a relative handful of tenured teachers, perhaps about two dozen, are dropped each year because of the more complex, burdensome and time-consuming process required for dismissing such teachers.

Mr. Arricale made the comments in an interview during which he amplified remarks given at the annual convention of the Council of Supervisors and Administrators, which was held at the Concord Hotel here this weekend. The Council is the union that represents the city's 1,000 public school principals and 3,000 other supervisors and administrators. The personnel chief said that the demand for satisfactory teacher performance reflected a number of new situations in education, including the move toward greater professional accountability and the end of the shortage of teachers. He said that many parents and supervisors were now less tolerant of teachers whom they regarded as substandard.

New Situations
Mr. Arricale said that supervisors in the system were now being better trained, both in how to help their teachers do a more effective job, and also how to proceed if the performance of an unsatisfactory teacher cannot be improved.

Many unsatisfactory teachers, he said, are unable to control their classes or are ineffective instructors. Occasionally, he went on, there is a bizarre situation involving an unfit teacher: One recently dismissed teacher had his pupils sit in a line that was suspended from the classroom ceiling and while the pupils swung back and forth, the teacher would dab paint on their faces.

Effect of Taylor Law
Teachers are normally eligible for tenure after three years of probationary service. With tenure, they can be dismissed for unsatisfactory service only after charges are preferred and upheld. However, under the penalties of the state's Taylor Law, all teachers who went on strike last fall are on probation for a one-year period through next October, Mr. Arricale noted.

Mr. Arricale emphasized that while the presence of incompetent or unfit teachers was always a matter of concern, the vast majority of the system's more than 50,000 teachers were performing in a very satisfactory way.

At another convention session, Peter S. O'Brien, the president of the Council, urged that employee unions be given representation on the policy-making City Board of Education. He said that his suggestion was not intended as "a union power play" but as "a democratic sharing calculated to enhance the quality of education in our city."

Daniel P. Moynihan, the former chief United States representative at the United Nations, was a speaker at the convention banquet last night. Mr. O'Brien told the audience that if Mr. Moynihan decided to seek the Democratic nomination for the United States Senate, he—Mr. O'Brien—would urge the supervisors' union to support his candidacy.

This is a retarded child being cured.

Malnutrition.
And so has the cure.

Food.
But only in the past 15 years has medical science discovered just how closely linked are physical deprivation and mental deprivation.

"The Unfinished Child," tonight's special program on Channel 7, takes a close look at infant malnutrition. How it begins, where it can lead, and what can be done about it.

Host Patricia Neal visits with mothers, expectant mothers, children and doctors as she explains the "poverty cycle" and how it contributes to malnutrition.

Being born poor, usually means being born hungry. And staying that way. And eventually producing children who are born poor and hungry, too.

The way to break this starts before the child is feeding the mother properly. In the second half of program, Geraldo Rivera's distinguished panel of experts, including Senator Jacob K. Javits, discuss the "poverty cycle" programs to prevent it. A message on this important subject.

In "The Unfinished Child" find out why in the land of plenty there are plenty of people going hungry. And what's being done about it.

'Good Times' Will Drop Male Parent; Black Media Coalition Protests Move

By LES BROWN
For three seasons, "Good Times" has been a successful situation comedy series on CBS about an urban black family. But when the series returns next fall, the male parent will be written out of the show, and the story lines will turn on the struggle of the mother to manage the family alone.

making a casting change. The coalition has asked Mr. Lear to do the same, but Mr. Lear's company has indicated that it will not.
"Positive Character"
Mr. Marshall contended that black children watch a great deal of television and "desperately need positive black male images." He maintained that the elimination of the character portrayed by Mr. Amos in "Good Times" will result in the loss of the only "positive" black adult character in prime-time television.

ABC Acquires Three Affiliates

Two television stations currently affiliated with CBS and one that has been carrying NBC's programs have announced that they will switch to ABC. The addition of the stations will increase the potential national circulation for its programs by several thousand homes.
The two CBS stations are in Butte and Missoula, Mont., cities where ABC has never had a regular affiliation because each has only two television stations on the air, and they were committed to CBS and NBC. The stations had carried some of ABC's more popular programs, but usually not in the most desirable time periods.
